MEMORANDUM

THE WHITE HOUSE
WASHINGTON

February 14, 1983

TO: JIM JENKINS
FROM: JOE HOLMES

It is, and has been my purpose to provide to scholars and historians a record of the activities of Ronald Reagan as President on videotape in a audiovisual center at the Reagan Library.

This is best accomplished by videotapes and VCR machines which can be operated in control booths by the user.

If a scholar wishes to study the President's activities for a particular date or a particular subject, the librarians could provide them.

This is not the case in most of the Presidential libraries. For example, in the Johnson Library, where Johnson's "history" is a series of films which are, in effect, glossy "propaganda" films about the man. Because it is film, the viewing must be shown on a projector, and an operator provided by the library.

The way of the future for the Reagan Library is videotape. Any judgement that it fades away is just poor judgement. I have videotape in my office that is 12 years old. The quality is excellent. An on-going evaluation of the videotapes would signal a requirement to make new dubs of any fading tapes.

Attached is a listing of the President's Activities for a one week period. These listings, also cross-indexed by subject, will cover his entire term.

The President today announced his intention to establish the Ronald Reagan Presidential Library at Stanford University in close proximity to the Hoover Institution.

Both Stanford University and the Hoover Institution have expressed their enthusiasm about the possibility of adding the Reagan Presidential papers to his gubernatorial and Presidential Campaign papers, which are currently located in the Hoover Institution archives.

Consistent with the practice of previous presidents it is expected that there will be a library housing the presidential papers, a museum, and a center for public affairs to bring together scholars, government policymakers, and others to discuss and analyze national issues.

In his letter of January 13, 1983 to W. Glenn Campbell, the Director of the Hoover Institution, the President said:

The designation of the Hoover Institution at Stanford University as the site to house my Presidential materials would be a natural extension of my long association as an Honorary Fellow of the Hoover Institution and would make possible the unification of my Presidential papers with my gubernatorial papers and the 1976-1980 campaign and transition files, totaling some 2,600 cubic feet, that have already been donated to the Hoover Institution. The location of the library on the campus of Stanford University would make the historical record of my administration widely accessible to the academic community and the public. . . . I believe we should begin now to make plans for a library and for the preservation of the fullest possible record of this Administration.

A detailed proposal is being developed by the Hoover Institution and, after approval by the President and Board of Trustees of Stanford University, will be submitted to President Reagan.

The entire Presidential library complex is expected to be financed completely by private contributions.

Dear Mike:

Congratulations on putting together a fine summit. Judging from the media coverage I have seen and read, the President came across very well as a leader in control.

My real purpose for this letter is to submit to you an idea on behalf of Joe Holmes. I know Joe was always submitting ideas to you, so I figured, why break the chain.

I believe this idea is very simple. I know that Joe's daily efforts in the White House were designed to compile a historical record of the President's activities for the National Archives, historians, and ultimately, the Reagan library.

In honor of Joe's undivided loyalty and dedication to the President, I thought it might be possible one day, when such a library is dedicated, to have some type of marker to indicate Joe's contribution to this collection of history. It would be a very fitting tribute to his family, and to a man who, if he were alive, would never seek such recognition.

Thank you in advance for your consideration of this idea, and again, congratulations on such a fine summit. I am sorry I could not be a part of it, but I appreciate being included in the preliminary stages, and if I can be of any assistance in the future, please let me know.

Sincerely,

David P. Prosperi

Dear Ed:

Thank you for your letter of June 13 and for thinking of me as you begin the all-important work of planning for the assemblage of material for President Reagan's library.

Unfortunately, as has been the case since my previous service in the White House carrying through to include my service as Secretary of State my papers have been deeded to the Library of Congress.

I do appreciate your invitation and you have my best wishes for your success in this most important endeavor.

Sincerely,

Dear Mac:

Although the time has not yet come for the President to make final decisions concerning his future Presidential Library, we have been advised that there are some preparations for the Library that should be accomplished now. I am writing to you today to request that you consider donating your personal papers to the National Archives for placement in the future Reagan Presidential Library.

The official records of Administration officials are classified legally as Federal records or Presidential records, depending on the organizational location of the official. This solicitation letter is not directed at these official materials, which are already governed by statute, but rather at those personal materials which fall outside the definition of official records.

These personal materials might include extra copies of official records, personal diaries or journals, or the documentation of your career prior to the Reagan Administration. Enclosed with this letter are copies of standard records definitions. Personal papers may be donated to the Government through individual deeds from donors and are subject to any restrictions imposed by the donor. These donated materials are not subject to the Freedom of Information Act. Donations might occur now or be scheduled for some point in the future.

I hope and believe that the future Reagan Presidential Library will be a prestigious research institution dedicated to the study of this significant period in our nation's history. The seven existing Presidential Libraries, for Presidents Herbert Hoover through Gerald Ford, are considerably enriched and complemented through donated historical collections. Some of the most valuable of these collections are the personal papers of Administration officials.

Several other historical organizations have already contacted officials of this Administration concerning the donation of their personal papers. I urge you to consider the advantages of donating such papers to the National Archives for placement in the future Reagan Presidential Library. A representative of the Archives' Office of Presidential Libraries will be contacting you soon to discuss this matter. Meanwhile any questions can be answered by Dr. Robert M. Warner, Archivist of the United States, or Marie Allen, Director of the Presidential Records Staff (202/456-2545).

The official records of Administration officials are classified legally as Federal records or Presidential records, depending on the organizational location of the official. This solicitation letter is not directed at these official materials, which are already governed by statute, but rather at those personal materials which fall outside the definition of official records.

These personal materials might include extra copies of official records, personal diaries or journals, or the documentation of your career prior to the Reagan Administration. Enclosed with this letter are copies of standard records definitions. Personal papers may be donated to the Government through individual deeds from donors and are subject to any restrictions imposed by the donor. These donated materials are not subject to the Freedom of Information Act. Donations might occur now or be scheduled for some point in the future.

I hope and believe that the future Reagan Presidential Library will be a prestigious research institution dedicated to the study of this significant period in our nation's history. The seven existing Presidential Libraries, for Presidents Herbert Hoover through Gerald Ford, are considerably enriched and complemented through donated historical collections. Some of the most valuable of these collections are the personal papers of Administration officials.

Several other historical organizations have already contacted officials of this Administration concerning the donation of their personal papers. I urge you to consider the advantages of donating such papers to the National Archives for placement in the future Reagan Presidential Library. A representative of the Archives' Office of Presidential Libraries will be contacting you soon to discuss this matter. Meanwhile any questions can be answered by Dr. Robert M. Warner, Archivist of the United States, or Marie Allen, Director of the Presidential Records Staff (202/456-2545).

Dear Ruth:

Thank you for writing. I do have many fond memories of the Masonic Temple in Dixon and the good times we all had there. However, although a final decision about the location of the library has not yet been made, I do not think it will be in Dixon. Because one of the purposes of a Presidential library is to provide a place where scholars may do extensive research, it is traditional for them to be placed at or near large colleges or universities. The National Archives is heavily involved in the planning process. As much as I would like to see this project come to life in my home town, I do not anticipate that happening.

I have not yet made the decision about seeking a second term, but I will keep your kind encouragement in mind.

Nancy joins me in sending our warmest regards.

I think that the attached should go to the President for his signature. Mrs. Merrick is obviously a very old friend (FNF indicates he signs "Ronald"). He may want to tell her outright that Stanford is going to get the library. (That is the most reliable gossip I have heard on the library.)

Dear Mr. President:

Somehow I like that salutation better now than "Dutch". It cannot be too soon to consider the place for your library. May I suggest the Masonic Temple in Dixon which you surely well remember. The school dances took place there. I have been talking about this since you were elected president, and only today was I asked whether you had been told.

We worked over a year to prepare for your 50th high school reunion. Better run for four more years; so we will be able to complete plans for your library.

Dear Jeane:

Although the time has not yet come for the President to make final decisions concerning his future Presidential Library, we have been advised that there are some preparations for the Library that should be accomplished now. I am writing to you today to request that you consider donating your personal papers to the National Archives for placement in the future Reagan Presidential Library.

The official records of Administration officials are classified legally as Federal records or Presidential records, depending on the organizational location of the official. This solicitation letter is not directed at these official materials, which are already governed by statute, but rather at those personal materials which fall outside the definition of official records.

These personal materials might include extra copies of official records, personal diaries or journals, or the documentation of your career prior to the Reagan Administration. Enclosed with this letter are copies of standard records definitions. Personal papers may be donated to the Government through individual deeds from donors and are subject to any restrictions imposed by the donor. These donated materials are not subject to the Freedom of Information Act. Donations might occur now or be scheduled for some point in the future.

I hope and believe that the future Reagan Presidential Library will be a prestigious research institution dedicated to the study of this significant period in our nation's history. The seven existing Presidential Libraries, for Presidents Herbert Hoover through Gerald Ford, are considerably enriched and complemented through donated historical collections. Some of the most valuable of these collections are the personal papers of Administration officials.

The Honorable Edwin Meese III
Counsellor to the President
The White House
Washington, D.C. 20500

Dear Ed:

Thanks very much for your recent letter in behalf of a future Presidential Library for President Reagan.

In your letter you mentioned the possibility of donating my personal papers to the Presidential Library, including those of my previous career in the Senate and House.

As a Penn State alumnus, I agreed several years ago to send my House and Senate papers to Penn State for their use. I have sent this material to Penn State as well as some material from my position as Secretary of Health and Human Services. The HHS material consisted primarily of press statements, transcripts of press conferences and compilations of news stories from our "green sheet" which covered all the activities of my department.

If this material from HHS would be useful, I would be glad to have the department prepare similar HHS material and send it to the Archives in anticipation of a Reagan Presidential Library.

Sincerely,

Richard S. Schweiker

Dear Ed:

Please excuse my delay in responding to your letter dated June 13th requesting my donation of any personal materials relating to the campaign and/or my tenure as Secretary of Transportation. My style is such that I do not keep personal journals or diaries, and any records kept while serving as Secretary of Transportation would be of an official nature only.

The National Archives has been in touch with my office and we have told them that at some point in the future I will go over my files pertaining to the campaign to see if there are any records that they may deem appropriate.

I will keep you advised of any contribution I can make.

Sincerely,

Drew
