Dear Bill:

I commend you for your outstanding contribution to the success of the Williamsburg Summit. Your exceptional work on East-West energy issues, your contribution in putting together the concise final briefing package for the negotiations, and your draft of the original Williamsburg Declaration were of great assistance in forging both working documents and a clear and effective end product.

As you know, the Summit underscored dramatic accomplishments achieved among western countries in economic and security areas. Cooperative efforts to advance worldwide economic recovery, to stem the tide of inflation, to manage international debt, and to stimulate new investment in research and technology marked the beginning of a new era for all involved in the Summit. You have made a major contribution to an endeavor which will bear fruit in decades to come.

Sincerely,

Dear Bob:

I have learned from Judge Clark and Mike Deaver, as well as from George Shultz and Allen Wallis, of the important contributions you made to the Williamsburg Summit. While you never sought recognition or credit, your mark was unmistakably present in the final outcome. By not having cared who received credit for your efforts, you have my highest respect and admiration.

I have always felt a deep personal esteem for dedicated civil servants, our military men and women, and Foreign Service Officers who serve not only the President but, more importantly, the country through different times and different Administrations. Your dedication is typical of that of all servants of this great country -- giving our best while privileged to serve in this most historic democratic experiment the world has ever known.

The Honorable Donald T. Regan Secretary of the Treasury 15th Street & Pennsylvania Avenue Washington, D.C. 20220

Dear Don:

In the past few days I've had the priviliege of visiting with both Prime Minister Nakasone and Prime Minister Trudeau and of hearing their reflections on the Williamsburg Summit. Based on their comments, I think you, George Shultz, and especially the President are to be commended on a job well done.

I'd like to recite an anecdote for you from my recent meeting with Nakasone. The setting was a small group luncheon with him in New York on Tuesday after the Summit. Following lunch, the Prime Minister took questions from the assembled American businessmen and the first item raised (not by me, incidentally!) was the problems caused by the yen undervaluation.

Mr. Nakasone's response, and obviously I paraphrase, was "I thought you might ask that ... so I've prepared some remarks." From my perspective, three points highlighted the Prime Minister's response:

- 1. The matter of the fluctuation and stability of the yen was discussed at Williamsburg.
- 2. The yen is undervalued.
- 3. It must be made stronger, and I intend to undertake initiatives directed toward that goal.

Don, in my mind several important conclusions and questions emerge from this, and they constitute my reason for writing.

First, I want to thank you for the role you played in assuring that the topic would get some attention at Williamsburg. Although you and I may still not have achieved consensus on the exact nature of the problem and its potential solutions, I believe it is vitally important that you give it high priority attention, and I'm confident you are doing so.

Second, I think the commitment Prime Minister Nakasone made to us in New York is a promising development, and I would urge the United States to follow up aggressively on it. As you know, I have believed this is a problem which demands attention by both the U.S. and Japan. I hope Williamsburg will serve as a jumping off point for a major bilateral initiative, and not as a conclusion of as yet inconclusive discussions.

For our part, we intend to keep the matter before you as best we can. We've already undertaken some initiatives designed to address the questions Beryl Sprinkel raised when we met just prior to the Summit. And we'll be doing our best to continue to highlight the importance of this course of bilateral businessmen's meetings.

Having said all of this, let me express to you my main lingering concern. It is that while you, Prime Minister Nakasone, and other key actors in this dialogue have clearly expressed your concern about the yen/dollar problem and its implications, I am not yet assured that a particular plan is in place, or under development, to confront it.

One of the long-term solutions that both sides are locking toward -- a reduction in the U.S. interest rates to reduce the upward pressure on the dollar -- is a highly desirable goal and one which will help the situation. But as I've often said, I don't think we have a luxury of waiting for the long-term to solve this problem.

The Honorable Donald T. Regan -3-

There needs to be a short-term plan of action to address it. And as I've said to you, and anyone else who will listen, I hope the United States will take the lead in asserting the need for the Japanese to do something more than waiting for our interest rates to come down. A situation in which each side is waiting for the other to take a lead will not be satisfactory.

As always, I look forward to your thoughts on this subject.

Sincerely,

Que.

Focus Put On Growth

Shultz, Regan Give U.S. View

By STEVEN R. WEISMAN

Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, May 24 — Secretary of State George P. Shultz and Treasury Secretary Donald T. Regan said today that the need for economic growth would be the first priority at the economic summit conference this weekend at Williamsburg, Va.

"Clearly what the world needs right

"Clearly what the world needs right now, in an economic sense, is economic growth with low and moderating inflation," Mr. Shultz said at a joint briefing with Mr. Regan this morning. He added simply that the meeting's "theme song" would be "jobs."

The conference is to take place Saturday, Sunday and Monday. The participatants are the leaders of the United States, France, Britain, West Germany, Italy, Canada and Japan and the European Economic Commission.

As final plans for the summit meeting were being put into place, Mr. Shultz and Mr. Regan also declared their hope that many issues that had been contentious during last year's session at Versailles, France, would not prove divisive at Williamsburg.

Greater Stability Forecast

For example, they said there was a good possibility that fluctuating currency exchange rates would stabilize as the industrial nations of the West moved more toward harmonizing of their economic policies.

Such stability, they added, might eliminate the need for a broadly based international monetary conference of the sort sought by President François Mitterrand.

The French leader has called for a "new Bretton Woods," referring to the 1944 meeting in Bretton Woods, N.H., that set up the world's system of fixed currency exchange rates. That system was in place until 1971, when President Richard M. Nixon took the dollar off the gold standard. It was formally abandoned in 1973.

Mr. Shultz said: "It may very well be that underlying conditions will be more stable" in the future, leading to "a kind of parallel movement" in the economies of the participating conries. "So we have the possibility of entering something of a new area." Thursday, May 26, 1983 — C-4/4794.

He added that if there was sustained, noninflationary growth worldwide, "then we think that exchange rates will stabilize and there won't be a need for fixed rates, or indeed, any tampering with the world's economic system."

Administration officials have not ruled out the possibility of an agreement as Williamsburg to study Mr. Mitterrand's proposal.

But today Mr. Regan said: "In my judgment, at this time, a call for an immediate conference would be premature." He said President Reagan and other Administration officials wanted to hear Mr. Mitterrand's ideas first before making a final judgment.

While Mr. Regan and Mr. Shuitz briefed reporters, the White House today gave some new details for a summit meeting that is expected to be a significant test for Mr. Reagan's foreign policy skills.

The officials said the meeting would include three dinners and two lunches among the leaders, plus about ten hours of conference time. At the first morning session on Sunday, lasting about two and a half hours, the leaders will meet among themselves, without aides or note-takers, to determine the agenda for the rest of the sessions.

All the leaders will be at all the sessions, except for Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher of Britain, who is in the midst of an election campaigm.

Mrs. Thatcher is expected to arrive for dinner Saturday night, attend a full day of meetings Sunday and then return home before dinner that night.

The Treasury Secretary said the participants "shouldn't strive to produce specific proposals" but should discuss "general provisions and strategy." He said Washington's influence should be strong "due to our steadily improving economy."

But he and Mr. Shultz acknowledged that Europeans were alarmed about the prospect of high United States budget deficits in the coming years, a prospect they feel is contributing to high interest rates and is thus jeopardizing full economic recovery.

jeopardizing full economic recovery.

"Every country has problems, including us," Mr. Shultz said. "And the big deficits, particularly in the out years, the President has labeled as a major problem. Others think so, too." He said "these are all fair subjects of discussion" and that the President was "quite prepared" to discuss them.

At another point, Mr. Shultz said: "We have to explain our problem and agree that the deficits that are projected are too large. The President has said that and said that. And we're struggling politically to come to grips with it. I have a feeling we're going to get there one of these fine days."
