MEMORANDUM FOR CHARLES HILL
Executive Secretary
Department of State

SUBJECT: Statement on the 50th Anniversary of U.S.-Soviet Relations

Attached is a slightly modified version of the "Statement on the Fiftieth Anniversary of U.S.-Soviet Relations." Please proceed to utilize it as recommended in your memorandum of November 12.

STATEMENT ON THE FIFTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF U.S.-SOVIET RELATIONS

Today marks the fiftieth anniversary of the recognition of the Soviet Union by the United States. In a letter to the Soviet Commissar for Foreign Affairs written on this date in 1933, President Franklin Roosevelt expressed his hopes for the future: "I trust that the relations now established between our peoples may forever remain normal and friendly, and that our nations henceforth may cooperate for their mutual benefit and for the preservation of the peace of the world."

President Roosevelt had only these hopes to guide him. They continue to guide us, five decades later, in the conduct of relations with the Soviet Union. But we also have the record of the past fifty years before us. Unfortunately, that record falls short of what it should be.

The nuclear era has presented new challenges to all nations which seek peace, as we do. Soviet expansionism throughout that era has been a challenge in its own right. It has raised the honest question of whether the Soviet Union is as committed to peace as we are. Through strength, through realism, through responsible deterrence, and through dialogue, the peace has been preserved, but the challenge remains. For our part, we will continue in our efforts to build a constructive relationship with the Soviet Union on that basis. In this nuclear age our two countries inhabit a small and precious planet together. Through mutual cooperation we have a unique opportunity to reduce nuclear weapons in the world.

Our nations today have significantly different interests and values, as they did fifty years ago. But we are prepared to work with the Soviets to solve the problems that confront us. There is a need on both sides for responsible, predictable behavior, behavior that can lead to reduced tensions and equitable solutions that respect the interests of each. That is our approach. We will do our part to maintain the peace: that objective has guided us in relations with the Soviet Union for fifty years, and that is our objective today.

DRAFT MESSAGE

TO: The Presidium of the USSR Supreme Soviet

Fifty years have passed since diplomatic relations were established between our countries. As we note this anniversary, I hope that we can recommit ourselves to working constructively on the problems before us.

The United States has no higher aim nor more urgent goal than achieving and preserving world peace and security.

Let us seek ways, despite the differences in our governments, philosophies and values, to cooperate in reducing international tensions and creating a safer world.

If we can work together to this end, we shall be fulfilling the promise of November 16, 1933, when formal ties between our countries began.
