SUBJECT:

President's Meeting with Italian President Pertini: Participants and Venue

For the meeting which the President will have on Thursday, March 25, at 10:30 a.m., with Italian President Sandro Pertini, the following participants will attend (I am anticipating that you, Ed Meese, and Jim Baker will attend at your discretion):

- The Vice President
- Secretary Haig
- William P. Clark
- US Ambassador to Italy Max Rabb
- Acting Assistant Secretary Allen Holmes
- Senior NSC Staff Member James Rentschler (notetaker)

We do not yet know precisely how many people or who will be in the Italian party. Nevertheless, since these are likely to total at least four, a very brief photo opportunity should occur in the Oval Office for the two Presidents alone, with the meeting itself then following in the Cabinet Room (we will need the services of an interpreter on this occasion, which our office is coordinating with State).

President Pertini has asked for five minutes alone with the President. I propose the two of them remain in the Oval Office for a few minutes after the photo opportunity and then join the group in the Cabinet Room.

BY OWN SADATE 10/5/2022

Begin Summary:

On February 17, the Vice President met with Foreign Minister Colombo of Italy and Foreign Minister Flesch of Luxembourg. The Vice President outlined U.S. policies towards Central America, described domestic reaction to Poland and trade with Eastern Europe, and reviewed U.S. relations with China. Ministers Colombo and Flesch described European attitudes towards these questions.

End Summary.

Meeting with Minister Colombo:

In response to the Vice President's question, Foreign Minister Colombo discussed General Dozier's rescue and the Red Brigades in Italy. He said that the success of rescuing General Dozier had been important for both Italy and for the United States. The arrest of the suspected members of the Red Brigades had been particularly effective in combating the Veneto column, but other columns, for example in Naples and Milan, retained strength. The Italian Government still did not fully understand the links between the Red Brigades and international terrorism. They were convinced that international links existed: Caches of weapons from different countries had been found; there was the incident of the Turkish assassin's attempt on the Pope's life.

CONFIDENTIAL Classified/Extended by WP Clark Review on 2/19/2012 Reason: NSC 1.13(a) - 2 -

The discussion turned to Poland. The Vice President noted that the President was coming under increasing domestic criticism for not doing enough for Poland. What bothered the President, the Vice President and many other Americans was that the Polish people had made a small step toward freedom and had been brutally repressed. It was not enough to sit still and say in the West that nothing could be done. The West must find some way to achieve the three agreed objectives: the release of Walesa and other prisoners, the resumption of dialogue between the Government and Solidarity, and the lifting of martial law. He posed the question whether it is better to bail out Soviet satellites or crack down more. In his conversations with trade union leaders recently in Florida, the Vice President had been told that the President must do more. One suggestion was that the United States cut all economic ties with the Soviet bloc - technology, trade, grain, credits, everything. There should be no business with the Soviet Union until it returned to the norms of civilized national behavior. Another alternative raised by some in the United States was to throw Poland into default. The President had been heavily criticized for paying the $70 million dollars to prevent default on one Polish loan. Why should the West fund the economic activities of the Soviet Union and its satellites as they intensified the repression of their people? The Vice President concluded that these ideas had not yet been adopted by the Administration, but he wanted to let Foreign Minister Colombo know just what the mood of the country was. It was not enough to light candles, it was necessary to take some concrete actions.

Minister Colombo made several points. He noted that the Alliance had taken a united position on the unacceptability of repression of Poland and the Soviet responsibility for it. There had been sanctions against Poland and the Soviet Union by individual countries. It was best to wait to assess the impact of these actions before taking further ones. the one hand it was necessary to punish Jaruzelski and the Soviet Union, on the other hand it was important not to push Poland deeper into the Soviet bloc or to create a gulf between the Polish people and the West. As far as calling Poland into default and restricting credits, the question was whether this would draw the other Eastern European countries including Poland away from the Soviet Union or make them more dependent. There were also the financial consquences to consider for the It was also important for the West to act collectively. The meetings of the five major NATO nations and the wider consultations were working well and should be continued. Soviet Union should never be given the victory of Western division. He noted the Soviet campaign to deflect interest from Poland by using issues of violations of human rights in other countries such as El Salvador and Turkey. It was important not to allow the public affairs campaign to go in this direction. This was particularly important for the Italian Government, since a split between the Socialist party and the rest of the coalition over El Salvador could bring down the government.

The Vice President turned to the subject of El Salvador. expressed amazement that liberal opinion in the United States and Socialist opinion in Europe could take the side of Castro and the Soviet Union. He wondered how these people could oppose free internationally supervised elections in El Salvador and support a man like Castro who was sending weapons and sowing unrest in other countries in Central America, and the world. The atrocities reported in the press were generally attributed to right wing forces while the violence and brutality of left wing guerillas in El Salvador and government forces in Nicaragua went unreported. The Vice President agreed completely with those who said El Salvador should not become another Vietnam. Vietnam today was a country in which individual freedoms had been completely suppressed, the number of newspapers had been reduced from 33 to one and thousands of citizens had been forced to flee in boats. As for the Cuban model, Castro had emptied his jails into the United States during the recent boat exdous. Criminals, drug dealers, rapists, and the mentally ill had all been dumped into the United States. Were these the sorts of examples which those who supported the querrillas in El Salvador were saying they favored? The Vice President said it was important for responsible officials in this country to gain the support of Americans for our policy in El Salvador. It was also important for European public opinion to be properly informed.

Prime Minister Colombo agreed with the Vice President's analysis.

He said that he had had similar frustrating conversations with

- 5 **-

European socialists. He particularly decried the French/ Mexican declaration on El Salvador.

The Vice President closed the meeting by reiterating his and the President's admiration for the leadership which the Italian Government had shown. He said that there was a great deal of goodwill in the White House toward the people and the government of Italy and what it was standing for.

Prime Minister Colombo said that he wished the American/
Italian relationship could be a model for a larger relationship between the United States and Europe as a whole.
Meeting with Minister Flesch:

In response to a question from Foreign Minister Flesch, the Vice President reviewed the state of American relationships with China and Taiwan. He summarized U.S. policy as maintaining a good relationship with China while fulfilling the provisions of the Taiwan Relations Act. He felt that the prospects were good that the United States would be able to strike the balance to implement this policy successfully. The Vice President recounted Congressional concerns over the PRC's commitment to peaceful reunification in enacting the Taiwan Relations Act.

He assessed that the PRC's attitude on this question had come a long way since the Chinese were now espousing peaceful renuficiation with Taiwan. He assessed that the relationship with the US was so important to the PRC that they would make accommodations to maintain it. He discounted the prospects for a rapproachment between the PRC and the USSR. Overall, the Vice President expressed satisfaction with the state of relations with the PRC, but stressed the President's determination not to further let down old friends in Taiwan.

In response to a question from Minister Flesch, the Vice President said that he did not foresee major dramatic shifts in the PRC leadership or policy.

Turning to the situation in El Salvador, the Vice President explained that the President and he felt very strongly that United States policy there was correct, but that public awareness of the policy was poor. He recognized that there were social and economic problems in El Salvador, and that excesses had been committed by military units. However, President Duarte was a decent man. He was attempting to bring peace and prosperity to his country and the United States supported him in these efforts. The United States did not approve of the French/Mexican declaration on El Salvador, and the Vice President pointed out that fourteen other Latin American states had also condemned it. There was no question that the insurgency in El Salvador was fanned by Castro supplying arms to the insurgents which were funded by the Soviet Union. The United States simply did not want another Castro in Central America. Neither was it in Mexico's interest to do nothing about El Salvador. He and the President felt very strongly that there should not be another

Vice President expressed concern at the tendency of thoe in the United States who draw an analogy between Vietnam and El Salvador to overlook the consequences of the fall of South Vietnam for the Vietnamese people and for their neighbors in Indochina. He also expressed concern that the messages of the Salvadoran bishops which are critical of the insurgents and supportive of elections were being overshadowed by the rhetoric of the sympathics of the insurgents in the U.S.

The Vice President emphasized US anger at the activities of Castro's Cuba. He noted that Castro's supporters and sympathizers in the United States and Europe seemed not to have noticed the boatlift from Cuba, where Castro had emptied his jails and mental hospitals into the United States. During a recent trip to Florida the Vice President had heard firsthand of the crime and violence perpetrated by the undesirables that Castro had sent to the United States. In conclusion the Vice President said that the President would soon be speaking out on our Caribbean policy.

The discussion turned to Libya.

In response to a question from Foreign Minister Flesch,

the Vice President said that he felt that Qadhafi's behavior fell well below any standard of civilized international behavior. The death threats against American officials by Libya had been well founded and the actions of the American security services were only prudent. There had been no exaggeration of these threats for publicity purposes. The Vice President noted that he had tried for years without success at the United Nations to initiate coordinated international action against terrorism. Foreign Minister Flesch noted that many African leaders had told her that they were frightened by Qadhafi. The Vice President added that Qadhafi had a great deal of money to spread around to cause further problems.

The discussion turned toward Poland. Minister Flesch noted that there were two possible courses for events in Poland to take. First, martial law could be maintained or increased, probably leading to additional violence. Second, the Polish Government could scale down the pressure, attempting to restore more normal relations, although she doubted they would return to the conditions of the summer of 1981. She thought the key factor to watch for was the relationship between the government Solidarity and the union.

The Vice President said that the situation in Poland was frustrating for American leaders and for the American people. The modest attempt by the Polish people to gain some of the freedoms they had been denied at Yalta had been severely repressed. Yet some said the West could do nothing to help. Poland owed the West $4 billion this year and yet people said that the West had no leverage to exert on Poland. Sentiment was building in the United States to take more positive actions to help the Poles. Some in the United States were calling for a total embargo or for forcing default on Polish debt. Minister Flesch said that in certain parts of Europe - France, Belgium, and Luxembourg for example, there was popular emotional support for the Poles. United States could come up with some effective measures that would actually help the Poles they would have full support, especially in these areas. However, it was unclear if the measures suggested would actually help Poland, and their adverse economic effects on the West were well known and difficult to accept. Minister Flesch said it was important for the Alliance to consult ahead of time on possible measures to take. She said that the Alliance reaction to Poland had been much better coordinated than it had been to Afghanistan but that there was still more to be done. For example there was the pipeline. probably too late now, to back out of the entire project. In the past, however, alternatives should have been examined and advance planning done. There was planning still to be done on energy security in Europe.

The Vice President said that there was honest difference between the United States and its Allies over the pipeline.

The United States did not like it, but recognized that it was not an ultimately American decision. The United States felt it gave the Soviets a real lever over the West. He noted that the Soviet Union would probably be an importer of oil by the late 1980's and wondered what they would do at that point. Would they be a reliable supplier of energy to Europe? Would they themselves enter the spot market and buy oil, or would they attempt to secure supplies from the Middle East? He considered the second alternative unlikely. He agreed with Minister Flesch that the Alliance should be thinking ahead and formulating alternative policy options on important questions such as this.

UNOFFICIAL TRANSLATION

Dear Mr. President,

my journey through your wonderful country will remain an indelible impression on my spirit.

I will always remember our meeting and our frank discussions, of such great value for our two countries, which are bound by sincere friendship.

Please, assure your wife that I will never forget the charm and warmth shone to me.

I await your visit to Rome with great pleasure. We will be able to resume our friendly talks, which contribute so much to strengthening the friendship between our two countries.

My very best wishes to you, my dear friend, to your very dear wife and to all your family.

Please remember me to Mr. Haig.

With sincere friendship

Sandro Pertini

Dear Joe:

Mancy and I were delighted to have you and Mrs. Montana here for the dinner honoring President Sandro Pertini. We were pleased that you and our good friend Dick Schweiker joined forces that evening and hope that you enjoyed the occasion as much as we did.

The "special" football that you brought for me on behalf of the San Francisco 49ers was a terrific surprise. You and your teammates have thrown some great passes and kicked many outstanding field goals, but I shall prize this particular move more than any I have been privileged to witness firsthand. I am grateful to you and your fellow World Champions for your generous gesture of friendship.

Nancy and I join in sending you, Mrs. Montana and all the 49ers our very best wishes.

Sincerely,

Remain Person

Earlier in the day, White House staff and press gathered in the East Room to hear Sinatra and Como and their Italian backup band practice. "This is the Italian hour," Sinatra joked to the crowd. .

Nancy Reagan surprised the singers by showing up for the end of their rehearsal. The first lady danced into the room as the band started playing Rodgers and Hart's "The Lady Is a Tramp." Sinatra sang the song, substituting "champ" tramp.

Joe Montana, who has the reputation of being cool in combat on the football field, arrived at the White House wringing his hands last night.

"Nervous," he responded when asked how he felt. "I told my dad I was so nervous that he could take my place."

Asked whether he and his wife. Republicans, were quipped, "We are tonight." Dodgers manager Lasorda arrived with his high school pal from Norristown, Pa., Health and Human Services Secretary Richard Schweiker.

"He was on the tennis team and I was on the baseball team," said Lasorda, draping his arm around his friend.

"He did better than I did," said Schweiker. "He stuck with it."

"But he's got a pretty good job too," said Lasorda.

"He's a winner," shot back Schweiker. The two men filed into the dinner arm and arm.

Dinner last night consisted of shrimp mousse, tenderloin of veal, asparagus and strawberries. For the first time, the president and first lady's tables were next to each other in the state dining room. Normally, they are across the room from each
