MEMORANDUM

ADMINISTRATIVELY SENSITIVE - not to be released
Without authority of the Counsel to the President

THE WHITE HOUSE

WASHINGTON

June 27, 1983

FOR: RICHARD A. HAUSER

FROM: JOHN G. ROBERTS DSR
SHERRIE M. COOKSEY smc

SUBJECT: Debate Briefing Book

You asked that we examine statutes that may be applicable to the reported receipt by various members of the Reagan Campaign of a briefing book compiled to prepare former President Carter for the debate with then-candidate Reagan. The applicability of federal statutes governing theft of records and receipt of stolen records hinges on whether the records in question were the property of the United States. The leading provision, 18 U.S.C. § 641, provides:

"Whoever embezzles, steals, purloins, or knowingly converts to his use or the use of another, or without authority, sells, conveys or disposes of any record, voucher, money, or thing of value of the United States or of any department or agency thereof, or any property made or being made under contract for the United States or any department or agency thereof; or Whoever receives, conceals, or retains the same with intent to convert it to his use or gain, knowing it to have been embezzled, stolen, purloined or converted -- Shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than ten years, or both; but if the value of such property does not exceed the sum of $100, he shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than one year, or both. The word "value" means face, par, or market value, or cost price, either wholesale or retail, whichever is greater."

It is an element of the offense that the record in question be the property of the United States. United States v. Collins, 464 F. 2d 1163, 1165 (9 Cir. 1972); United States v. Farrell, 418 F. Supp. 308 (M.D. Pa. 1976). It is now well-established, however, that the prosecution need not prove that the individual who took the document, or those who received it, knew it to be a record of the United States. See e.g., United States v. Jermendy, 544 F.2d 640, 641 (2 Cir. 1976) (citing cases). The Tenth Circuit adhered to the opposite view for a decade, Findley v. United States, 362 F.2d 921, 922-23 (1966), before reversing itself, United States v. Speir, 564 F.2d 934 (1977) (en banc). All that need be shown is that the record was in fact a government record.

The prosecution must prove that the document in question was stolen or knowingly converted to private use, and that those charged with receipt of the document knew it to have been so stolen or converted. It is apparently not necessary, however, to know who stole the document, or even to allege that the identity of that individual is unknown. Kirby v. United States, 174 U.S. 47, 62-65 (1899). It is accordingly no defense for one charged with receipt of stolen government documents to contend that he did not know who obtained them, so long as he can be shown to have known they were stolen. Since the statute is triggered by conversion of documents to private use as well as theft, it would seem to be immaterial whether the individual who originally obtained the documents had a legitimate right of access to them.

The critical question is whether the briefing book may be considered the property of the United States. If it was compiled solely for purposes of the debate it would not be a government record but the private property of the former President's campaign apparatus. In this regard it is noteworthy that the Presidential Records Act, although not effective at the time of the campaign, Pub. L. 95-591, § 3, considers political documents unrelated to the President's official duties and materials relating to the President's election as "personal records" which are not subject to the ownership of the United States. 44 U.S.C. § 2201, 2202.

It should be noted that if the Carter debate materials are considered government property, questions with respect to the use of appropriated funds for preparation of these materials which were to be used for "political" rather than "official" purposes could be raised. (As you know, the Comptroller General has consistently taken the position that appropriated funds may be used only for the purposes for which they were appropriated, and that official funds may not be used for purely partisan political purposes. See 31 U.S.C. § 628, 52 Comp. Gen. 504 (1972); 50 Comp. Gen. 534 (1971).) Additionally, Hatch Act violations may have occurred as a result of Domestic Policy staff officials preparing this political document. (Domestic Policy staff officials, unless paid out of the White House Office budget, would have been subject to the prohibitions of the Hatch Act against Federal employees participating in political activities. See 5 U.S.C. § 7324.)

If the individual who obtained the briefing book copied an existing book and provided the copy to the Reagan Campaign, an argument can be advanced that no property was taken. This argument could be made even if the original book were to be considered government property. In United States v. Hubbard, 474 F. Supp. 64 (D.D.C. 1979), the court ruled that a violation of 18 U.S.C. § 641 may be established where the defendant copied government documents by means of government resources. The court expressly declined to rule that a violation could be based simply on the theory that the defendant stole information. In the court's view, copying the documents was not enough, but copying by means of government resources was. As the court noted, "If section 641 reaches the theft of government information, as the government contends, serious first amendment questions would be raised, and there is ample legal authority to avoid those constitutional questions by interpreting the statute to not include information as a thing of value." The court cited Pearson v. Dodd, 410 F.2d 701 (D.C. Cir.), cert denied, 395 U.S. 947 (1969), which ruled that no tortious conversion occurred when documents were temporarily removed for copying purposes. That case involved a suit by Senator Dodd against reporters Drew Pearson and Jack Anderson. It may be useful to remind questioning reporters of the broader significance of a theory that would treat as theft the obtaining of government information, and treat as receipt of stolen goods the receipt of such information. For example, the front page of today's Post, with an article on the briefing book, also contains an article on the Baby Doe regulations based on the Post's receipt of a copy of the draft regulations. As the Hubbard court remarked, "if there were a crime for converting unspecified government information, it would not be limited to photocopying. If a person came across completely unclassified information during his employment within the federal government, and discussed it outside the scope of his employment, an argument could be made that he had converted government information in violation of section 641." The court rejected such a theory on First Amendment grounds.

The Second Circuit, however, has held that information is covered by 18 U.S.C. § 641, see United States v. Girard, 601 F.2d 69, 71 (2 Cir. 1979) cert. denied, 444 U.S. 871 (1980) ("the Government has a property interest in certain of its private records which it may protect by statute as a thing of value. It has done this by the enactment of section 641"). The Ninth Circuit has applied § 641 to a transcript of grand jury proceedings, United States v. Friedman, 445 F.2d 1076, 1087, cert. denied, 404 U.S. 958 (1971). On the other hand, Judge Winter opined that he would not apply § 641 to classified information, United States v. Truong Dink Hung, 629 F.2d 906 (4 Cir. 1980), and noted that its application to any type of information must be carefully considered on a case-by-case basis. The applicability of § 641 to this case must, accordingly, be considered very uncertain, even if the briefing book were considered government property.

A separate provision, 18 U.S.C. § 654, may apply to the individual who actually took the briefing book. Section 654 provides:

"Whoever, being an officer or employee of the United States or of any department or agency thereof, embezzles or wrongfully converts to his own use the money or property of another which comes into his possession or under his control in the execution of such office or employment, or under color or claim of authority as such officer or employee, shall be fined not more than the value of the money and property thus embezzled or converted, or imprisoned not more than ten years, or both; but if the sum embezzled is $100 or less, he shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than one year, or both."

This could apply if the individual in question were a federal employee and the briefing book came into his possession by virtue of his employment.

While the federal statutes depend upon the involvement of government documents, there are of course local D.C. provisions of general applicability which are not so limited. D.C. Code § 22-2205 establishes criminal penalties for receipt of stolen goods with intent to defraud. The elements of an offense under 22-2205 are receipt of the property, the fact that the property was stolen at time of receipt, knowledge that the property was stolen, and fraudulent intent in receiving the property. Tucker v. United States, 421 A.2d 32 (App. D.C. 1980). Of interest with respect to the individual who took the book, D.C. Code § 22-2201 prohibits grand larceny (value $100 or over) and § 22-2202 prohibits petit larceny. The discussion above covering whether "property" is taken when information is copied would apply to these local provision as well as the federal statutes.

Another possible violation of Federal law that could be raised with respect to the legality of the Reagan campaign obtaining a Carter briefing book would be a violation of the prohibitions against fraudulent misrepresentation of campaign authority found in the Federal Election Campaign Act, 2 U.S.C. § 441h. That provision states that:

"No person who is a candidate for Federal office or an employee or agent of such candidate shall--

(1) fraudulently misrepresent himself ... as speaking or writing or otherwise acting for or on behalf of any other candidate ... on a matter which is damaging to such other candidate ...; or

-5-

(2) willfully and knowingly participate in or conspire to participate in any plan, scheme, or design to violate paragraph (1) above.

Violation of this provision is a civil offense and would be investigated by the FEC; although the FEC may refer possible violations of the Federal election laws to the Attorney General. See 2 U.S.C. § 437g.

MEMORANDUM FOR: RICHARD HAUSER
FROM: KATHERINE CAMALIER KC
SUBJECT: General Election Campaign

Per your request, attached is the Reagan-Bush Staff Directory for the 1980 general election campaign.

I have not been able to locate an official organizational chart for the campaign and do not recall that one ever existed.

In response to your question regarding the flow of information for the debate briefings, the following is the only side of the flow that I observed. During the preparation and planning stages of the debates, Mr. Baker worked closely with Dave Gergen, Frank Hodsoll, Bill Carruthers and Dean Burch. He of course met and spoke with numerous other members of the campaign staff.

As I recall, Dave Gergen and Frank Hodsoll coordinated a group that oversaw the preparation of the issues briefing papers for the debates. In my personal contact with this group, I remember dealing with Leslie Sorg, Ben Eshleman and Kim Tisdale who were full-time staff members and Mary Gall, Jackie Tillman and Hayden Bryan who came in in the evenings. There might have been others who contributed to the preparation of these issues briefing papers though I personally was not familiar with them or have since forgotten their names.

I want to stress that this is only my perception of the flow of information, as I remember it.

Jim Wright said he was called over to discuss his proposal for a bipartisan commission on El Salvador. He met with Jim Baker, Kenneth Dam, and Director Casey. They discussed the need for more bipartisan dialogue on the issue.

Encouraged by the press, Mr. Wright took some good-natured potshots at the President, suggested that bipartisan commissions have been good for the Democrats because they have brought the President around on issues which he previously had unalterably opposed.

About the briefing book: Wright said it was ungentlemanly, that he probably would not yield to such a temptation himself. In response to Sam Donaldson's question, Wright said he did not consider the briefing book caper, even if the President knew about it in advance, an impeachable offense.

In other words, no real news, other than the fact of the meeting.
