U.S. Catholic Official Explains Vatican's Nonrecognition of Israel

A key Vatican official indicated last week that Jewish leaders are deluding themselves if they believe the Vatican will extend diplomatic recognition to Israel before the Jewish state agrees to resolve the question of Jerusalem along lines acceptable to the Papacy.

Dr. Eugene Fisher, executive secretary for the Vatican Secretariate for Catholic-Jewish Relations, told the Jewish World, that "The status of Jerusalem must be internationally guaranteed. As long as the issue of Jerusalem is unresolved, the Vatican will not play its most valuable card, which is a diplomatic exchange with Israel."

Fisher's comments — coming in the wake of the broiling controversy over the Vatican's insistence that New York Archbishop John Cardinal O'Connor cancel his planned meetings in Jerusalem last week with Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir and President Chaim Herzog — vividly pointed up the reality that despite 20 years of fruitful and cordial dialogue between the Vatican and world Jewry, which has led to unprecedented Catholic efforts to uproot long-ingrained anti-Semitism within the Church, the two sides are still sharply divided over the issue of Israel.

The revelation of the continuing Vatican refusal to accord diplomatic recognition to Israel, has led to a renewed debate within the Jewish community over whether Jews ought to press forward with dialogue with Catholics on other issues of joint concern.

Fisher, who has met frequently over the years with members of IJCIC (the International Jewish Committee on Interreligious Consultations — the official body of world Jewry designated to meet with Vatican leadership), is seen by Jewish leaders as among the Vatican spokesmen most sympathetic both to world Jewry and to the state of Israel.

In his comments, Fisher acknowledged that, "Catholics need to increase their understanding of the centrality of Israel to the Jewish religion and to world Jewry, just as we need to increase our understanding of the 'Shoah.'"

Noting that he is aware of Jewish impatience with the position of the Papacy on the question of Israel, Fisher remarked, "It should be noted, however, that there have been some significant advances over the years by the Vatican. When Pope Paul VI came (to Israel) in 1965, he never once uttered the phrase 'State of Israel.' The present Pope, by comparison, speaks about the state of Israel frequently, has condemned terrorism directed against Israel, and has acknowledged Israel's right to security and tranquility."

Fisher also noted that the Vatican has left purposely ambiguous what solution it will settle for on the Jerusalem question, as well as on the Palestinian issue.

Fisher added, "The Vatican is not criticizing Israeli administration of the Holy Places. But given the flux in the Middle East, it is clear the Vatican wants a solution sealed into international law. They are thinking in terms of the ages. They also want a situation where, even if Meir Kahane gets elected mayor of Jerusalem, he would not be able to upset the balance that has been established."

Fisher noted, however, that the Vatican no longer speaks

status" for Jerusalem, but rather international statute." He explained, "this we mean that whoever has sovereignty over Jerusalem would have to upholding internationally agreed-upon principles. International statute would not preclude Israeli sovereignty, but would not see that as the only solution."

Fisher admitted that he was surprised that the Vatican had objected to O'Connor visiting the offices of Shamir and Herzog, since those offices are in West Jerusalem. He added, "West Jerusalem has not been an issue for the Vatican. What they have objected to has been the unilateral Israeli annexation of East Jerusalem."

Fisher also indicated that Vatican fear of a potential bloodbath of Catholic minorities in Arab countries has played an important role in its aloof attitude toward Israel.

"Certainly whatever the Vatican does vis-a-vis Israel has implications for Catholic minorities. Certainly, the interests of those minorities are not served by a state of war between Israel and her Arab neighbors," he explained.

Fisher said that at present, the impact of the O'Connor controversy on the overall framework of Catholic-Jewish relations is "hard to assess." It depends on what happens during O'Connor's visit in Israel. It should be noted that this controversy has brought to the center of the Catholic-Jewish dialogue the question of Israel, and I think that is a healthy development." □
