SUBJECT: European Public Perceptions of INF

You will be interested in the attached USIA briefing paper based on our latest round of INF surveys.

We have found that, except in Britain, public opposition to stationing prevails in four of the five basing countries.

We are faced with problems, in part, because the general public is either unaware of or unwilling to accept a number of the basic assumptions inherent in our INF policy.

At the same time, European publics tend to perceive our arms reduction negotiating efforts as sincere and clearly favor the President's interim proposal over the second Andropov proposal.

August 8, 1983

PUBLIC OPINION UPDATE ON INF

USIA-commissioned national public opinion surveys taken during June in the five basing countries suggest some problems and opportunities for U.S. policy.

The Setting: Opposition Predominates to INF Deployment

Outside Britain, where a large majority supports INF stationing, public opposition clearly prevails to stationing in their own country. Moreover, the extent of the opposition would be as widespread to deployment of a reduced number of new missiles agreed on by the U.S. and the Soviet Union, as it is to stationing in the absence of an arms control agreement.

Negative attitudes toward deploying an agreed-upon reduced number of Euromissiles may be influenced somewhat by a widely prevailing disbelief that the superpowers will reach an agreement by the end of the year.

PROBLEMS FOR THE U.S.: U.S. Assumptions Not Accepted

INF support and opposition are expressed in a public opinion climate of widespread unawareness or unwillingness to accept some basic assumptions inherent in U.S. policy:

- o Soviet INF Monopoly: Generally Not Perceived. Only about one in 10 know about the Soviet INF monopoly. The public debate about the French and British missiles, sparked by the second Andropov proposal, may have clouded the issue for the majorities or near-majorities everywhere who believe that "both" sides have Euromissiles in place.
- o Soviet INF Supremacy: Largely Not Recognized. Monopoly aside, even the Soviet superiority in missile strength in Europe tends to go unrecognized, except among the British public. Elsewhere, about as many (more in Belgium) perceive an existing superpower parity in Euromissiles, as see the Soviet Union ahead.
- o INF Deterrence Value: Widely Appreciated Only in Britain: In the continental basing countries, opinion is largely divided on whether the new Euromissiles would help prevent or increase the likelihood of a Soviet attack on Western Europe. (Opponents to deployment justify their position mainly by citing heightened danger, increased vulnerability, and fear of war.) The British public, polled immediately after the recent election, widely endorses INF as a deterrent force.

- o British and French Missiles: Confusion. Britain excepted, the view prevails that the British and French missiles are intended for national rather than for NATO's defense. British opinion splits on this score. At the same time, by wide margins, the publics in all basing countries think these missiles should be part of the U.S.-Soviet arms reduction talks. This seeming paradox, to some extent, probably reflects general anti-nuclear missile sentiment as well as the widespread unfamiliarity among the general public with the details of arms talks negotiations.

OPPORTUNITY FOR THE U.S.: Receptivity to U.S. Negotiating Efforts

Further U.S. INF initiatives at Geneva are likely to receive a sympathetic hearing from publics preoccupied with pressing economic and social problems.

- o U.S. Motives Credible. While, on the whole, they tend to lack confidence in U.S. ability to deal with world problems, Europeans generally credit the U.S. with making a genuine effort to reach an arms reduction agreement with the Soviet Union. Only Italian public sentiments tend in the opposite direction. By contrast, perceptions of Soviet sincerity are one-sidedly negative. A notable exception is the German public which is divided on the issue.
- o Reagan Proposal Preferred. Choosing between the Reagan interim proposal and the second Andropov proposal, European public opinion clearly favors the U.S. position. Given the ambivalent -- or uninformed -- reactions to the British and French missiles' intended purpose and their role in arms talk negotiations, the rejection of the Soviet proposal may have less to do with its specific provisions than with public perceptions of U.S. and Soviet credibility. And the U.S. has consistently scored better on such indicators.
- o INF Not A Central Public Concern. Compared with overriding economic and social problems, Europeans accord INF stationing a low ranking among worrisome national issues. (Characteristically, most are unaware when deployment is scheduled to begin). In keeping with this perspective, public activism in opposition to deployment is reported only by very small proportions of the general public. Belgians are the least involved in INF; the Dutch the most active.

THE WHITE HOUSE
WASHINGTON

August 12, 1983

Dear Mr. Abernathy:

It is good news for all Americans that the Congress has again demonstrated bipartisan unity in pursuit of two vital national goals -- strategic modernization and arms control. Their recent authorization of production of the MX Peacekeeper missile reaffirms our nation's united approach to the protection of peace.

During a gathering here at the White House in May which you were unable to attend, I stressed these two goals and asked for support. Thanks to the help of those who were able to attend, we are now in a stronger position to build on the START negotiations progress. But we're not home free yet. Maintaining bipartisan unity will require our best efforts, and you can still play an important role in this effort.

In September, Congress will again take up the Peacekeeper program. We look to the Congress to send an important message to the Soviets by passing the appropriation bill to fund the Peacekeeper missile.

The challenge remains before us. I, for my part, will continue to consult and work closely with members of the Congress on both sides of the aisle. I trust you are able to add to this effort, in keeping our national consensus -- one so very necessary for both peace and national security.

Sincerely,

RONALD REAGAN A

THE WHITE HOUSE
WASHINGTON

August 12, 1983

Dear Mr. Abernathy:

It is good news for all Americans that the Congress has again demonstrated bipartisan unity in pursuit of two vital national goals -- strategic modernization and arms control. Their recent authorization of production of the MX Peacekeeper missile reaffirms our nation's united approach to the protection of peace.

During a gathering here at the White House in May which you were unable to attend, I stressed these two goals and asked for support. Thanks to the help of those who were able to attend, we are now in a stronger position to build on the START negotiations progress. But we're not home free yet. Maintaining bipartisan unity will require our best efforts, and you can still play an important role in this effort.

In September, Congress will again take up the Peacekeeper program. We look to the Congress to send an important message to the Soviets by passing the appropriation bill to fund the Peacekeeper missile.

The challenge remains before us. I, for my part, will continue to consult and work closely with members of the Congress on both sides of the aisle. I trust you are able to add to this effort, in keeping our national consensus -- one so very necessary for both peace and national security.

Sincerely,

RONALD REAGAN A

Dear Mr. Chairman:

We have, per your request, reviewed H.R. 3073 which is designed "To implement the call of the President for a national strategy seeking to protect people from nuclear war and to render nuclear weapons obsolete."

Much of the substance of the bill deals with the organization of the Department of Defense and is not appropriate for State review.

On the issues of changing our national strategy and modifying arms control agreements or positions, however, the Department offers the following views:

- o Changing National Strategy. The President's call was for research and analysis to examine the technical possibilities and determine the military/political requirements for a strategy incorporating Defense Against Ballistic Missiles (DABM). That research and analysis is on-going, but many years of work will be needed before a new national strategy might be shaped. In the interim, we continue to rely upon a strategy of deterrence supported by credible capability involving both conventional and nuclear forces.
- o Altering Arms Control Agreements and Positions. Some DABM concepts might necessitate modification of existing arms control agreements, should the concepts themselves prove feasible and desirable. DABM may also be an opportunity for new arms control arrangements, e.g., to insure that no one country monopolizes DABM technology or deploys it earlier than another. For the foreseeable future, however, DABM will not be a part of our capabilities or strategy. Thus, we must continue to rely upon existing arms control agreements and those we are now seeking to contribute to stability.

The Honorable

Clement J. Zablocki, Chairman,
House Foreign Affairs Committee,
House of Representatives.

The Office of Management and Budget advises me that they have no objection to my submission of this report, from the standpoint of the Administration's program.

Sincerely,

Powell A. Moore
Assistant Secretary for Legislative and Intergovernmental Affairs

THE WHITE HOUSE
WASHINGTON

June 28, 1983

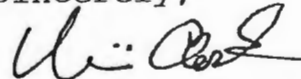

Dear Bishop Walker:

Thank you for your letter of June 22 advising
of the establishment by the Episcopal Diocese of Washington of a Committee of Inquiry on the Nuclear Issue.

We appreciate that your Diocesan Peace Commission earlier had recognized that while the nuclear issue does indeed pose serious questions of ethics and morality, there are also complex political issues which must be considered in any peace formula. We are pleased that your Committee of Inquiry has undertaken to gather views and to evaluate these interrelating issues.

At such time as your inquiry has reached the point where you wish to entertain informal discussions with the National Security Council, please call upon our staff member, Mr. Sven Kraemer (395-5010).

Sincerely,

William P. Clark

THE RIGHT REVEREND
JOHN T. WALKER
BISHOP OF WASHINGTON

June 22, 1983

Mr. William P. Clark, Jr.
Assistant to the President for National Security
National Security Council
Executive Office Building
Washington, DC 20506

Dear Mr. Clark:

I want to inform you of the establishment by the Episcopal Diocese of Washington of a Committee of Inquiry on the Nuclear Issue, and the beginning of the Committee's work. I regard the work of this Committee as one of the most important efforts that we are attempting in the Diocese, and I therefore wanted to call it to your special attention and to explain briefly its purpose, objective and method of proceeding.

In February 1982 at the request of the Diocesan Convention, I appointed a Diocesan Peace Commission to help carry out the intentions of the 1981 Pastoral Letter from the House of Bishops of the Episcopal Church. That letter called upon church people to work for peace and an end to the arms race. It is not surprising therefore that the Commission's attention has centered on the nuclear issue.

The Peace Commission recognized that what is called "the nuclear issue" is extremely complex, involving as it does different and interacting considerations over and beyond weapons themselves. It understood that there are different interpretations of the international realities; that there are legitimate national security concerns; and that there are varying kinds of strategies and options being discussed. It observed that the issue is so caught up in a swirl of rhetoric, charge and counter-charge, that it is not easy for the average person even to identify the practical issues. As a result, as concern over nuclear war rises, so too do frustration, confusion, perplexity and anxiety.

The Peace Commission consequently concluded that what was required now was the systematic development and articulation of an informed statement from the perspective of the Episcopal Church. The statement would consider the practical questions raised by the nuclear issue and how we - as citizens and Christians - should respond to the choices and dilemmas they pose. The Commission accordingly formed a sixteen-person Committee of Inquiry to undertake this task, and initiated its work on June 21. I attach a list of the Committee members for your information.

This enterprise parallels similar endeavors by others, most notably the American Roman Catholic Bishops' Pastoral. We believe, however, that our people should go through the analyzing process themselves. The Committee's project differs from other efforts in two ways. First, the Committee, as you will note, is made up predominantly of lay persons, and it will seek to speak essentially to the average parishioner. Secondly, its method of inquiry will be to proceed inductively. It will start with an analysis of the political and national security arguments and will attempt to identify the practical operational problems and choices facing decision makers in the way such issues actually present themselves. The Commission will then seek to understand how these "real life" problems are affected by and "fit into" the moral and ethical imperatives of our faith. How, in short, must a Christian view these concrete questions?

In the initial phase, viz., the examination of the security and political problems inherent in the nuclear question, the Committee hopes to consult widely with experts, scholars, government officials and "witnesses" on all sides of the issues. It will thus generally proceed as an intensive study group. The end result of this part of the exercise would be a kind of "Layperson's Guide" to the complex of issues, options and contrasting arguments which can be a resource appendix to the final statement.

We have been very aware that past statements by religious groups, including the Roman Catholic Bishops' Pastoral, have been discounted by some on the grounds that they were uninformed, inaccurate as to facts, naive as to political and security considerations, unrealistic and generally "fuzzy minded." The Committee, therefore, intends to devote considerable effort to identifying and understanding the "hard" choices, the political and security factors involved, and the premises, reasoning and arguments underpinning the various options and policies being debated, so that its final statement will have to be considered on its substantive merits and not dismissed as naive, inaccurate or unrealistic.

I stress the foregoing because I hope that the Committee will be able to call on you or members of your staff to aid it in its investigation and in acquiring an accurate understanding of the issues. Your cooperation on this score will be deeply appreciated.

The Committee intends to work intensively through the summer and into the fall, and hopes to prepare its final statement by late fall. When completed, it is my intention to distribute that statement widely throughout the Diocese, and perhaps make it available as well to the national church and the general public. It is the sincere hope of all of us involved in this endeavor that, God willing, we may be able to contribute to that Peace so difficult to obtain, yet so desperately desired by all peoples.

Faithfully,

John T. Walker
Bishop of Washington
