It gives me great pleasure to extend warmest greetings to the members of the Raoul Wallenberg Committee and the American Committee for Shaare Zedek Hospital in Jerusalem as you gather to confer the Raoul Wallenberg Award. My special congratulations to your distinguished honoree, Ross Perot.

Raoul Wallenberg is a name synonymous with courage, love of fellow man, and self-sacrifice. As a young Swedish diplomat, he was assigned to his country's legation in Hungary in 1944. Heedless of personal danger, he was responsible for saving the lives of nearly 100,000 Jewish men, women, and children from certain death in Nazi extermination camps. Each day he willingly jeopardized his own life so that others might live. In the depths of the horrors of World War II, Raoul Wallenberg was a shining light of inspiration. I am proud to say that he is the only non-American, other than Winston Churchill, ever to be accorded the status of an honorary U.S. citizen.

Nancy joins me in extending best wishes for a memorable celebration.

God bless you.

Ross Perot

Ross Perot is the Founder of the Dallas-based Electronic Data Systems Corporation (EDS).

Mr. Perot founded EDS in 1962. A computer services company, EDS employs more than 40,000 persons working in all states and several foreign countries. For calendar year 1985, EDS reported revenues of more than $3 billion and net income of $189.8 million.

Under Mr. Perot's leadership, EDS pioneered the computer services concept of facilities management. This means that EDS serves as the data processing department for a large insurance company, bank or government agency.

Other significant concepts originated or pioneered by EDS include: systems integration, which involves the combination of all data processing components for a client, including hardware, software, personnel, office automation and communications; long-term data processing contracts at predetermined prices; establishment of large regional data processing centers; and specialization of systems engineers in industry, such as insurance, finance or health care.

The company is perhaps best known for the careful introduced into the Texas Legislature passed both the House and Senate substantially as drafted and were subsequently signed into law by Governor Clements.

In 1983, Texas Governor Mark White appointed Mr. Perot head of the Select Committee on Public Education. The purpose of the Committee was to upgrade the quality of education in the Texas public school system.

After holding public hearings across the state and drafting a proposal to the Texas legislature, Mr. Perot personally lobbied legislators, business leaders, educators and citizens groups for support. A special session of the legislature passed a public education reform bill during the summer of 1984, which was signed into law by Governor White.

In addition to EDS, Mr. Perot's other business interests are in oil, gas and real estate. Mr. Perot, his wife, Margot, and five children have been major contributors to numerous charitable organizations.

Mr. Perot was born on June 27, 1930, in Texarkana, Texas. He graduated from public schools there and also attended Texarkana Junior College.

In 1949, he became a midshipman at the U.S. Naval Academy in Annapolis, Maryland. While at the Academy, he was elected President of his class, served as Chairman of the Honor Committee and was a battalion commander. He graduated with a Bachelor of Science degree in 1953 and was

The Shaare Zedek Medical Center of Jerusalem

The Shaare Zedek Medical Center, located on a 14 acre site opposite Mount Herzl in Jerusalem, is an impressive array of ten buildings and more than 1.3 million square feet in area. The $100 million facility provides an integrated and versatile community service in the heart of Jerusalem.

Shaare Zedek has a rich history of medical achievements in Israel and the Holy Land throughout the 20th Century. The Shaare Zedek Hospital was first built in 1902, and served as a casualty center and front-line military hospital during Israel's War of Independence and subsequent Middle East conflicts.

The hospital has been modernized and expanded many times throughout its history. With the opening of the Shaare Zedek Medical Center in 1979, Jerusalem entered into a new era of health and medical care for all its citizens -- Jews, Moslems and Christians. The Medical Center provides a broad range of diagnostic and therapeutic services, backed up by the most modern medical equipment and systems. Shaare Zedek also contains teaching facilities for medical and nursing students, outpatient clinics and a research institute.

The main hospital building contains more than 500 beds and dozens of medical departments and specialized units. A specially constructed Underground Emergency Hospital contains additional facilities that can be utilized in times of war. A self-contained Emergency Shelter, built to specifications of the Israeli Ministry of Defense, can be protected from nuclear, chemical and conventional attacks.

The Department of Pediatrics at Shaare Zedek has been in existence since 1961. This year, the hospital will provide more than 40,000 hospital care days for children and babies. The hospital delivered more than 5,000 babies in 1985.

On the Silver Anniversary Year of the Department of Pediatrics, Shaare Zedek is planning to name the Medical Center's Pediatric Day Hospital the Raoul Wallenberg Pediatric Day Hospital. Funds from the Raoul Wallenberg Award Dinner in New York on Wednesday, March 4, 1987 will be used to renovate, equip and expand the medical services of the children's wing.

attention given to the selection and training of its people, as well as Mr. Perot's personal interest in each employee. Mr. Perot personally directed a team of EDS employees in the successful extraction of two EDS employees who were being held hostage in Iran.

Working closely with the United States government, Mr. Perot was also involved full time for four years in a successful effort to change the treatment received by U.S. prisoners of war in North Vietnam. The program gained world-wide attention, and Mr. Perot received the Defense Medal of Distinguished Public Service. This medal is the Department of Defense's highest civilian award.

In 1979, at the request of Texas Governor William P. Clements, Mr. Perot agreed to form and chair a state organization known as the Texans' War on Drugs Committee. Under his leadership and with his full-time personal involvement, the Committee undertook a massive campaign to educate parents and children about the dangers of illegal drugs.

Additionally, the Texans' War on Drugs Committee directed a study by legal scholars of the laws concerning illegal drugs. Many shortcomings were found in existing laws. In 1981, the Committee developed a package of legislation designed to toughen the laws and make Texas the least desirable state for illegal drug operations. Five bills introduced into the Texas Legislature passed both the House and Senate substantially as drafted and were subsequently signed into law by Governor Clements.

In 1983, Texas Governor Mark White appointed Mr. Perot head of the Select Committee on Public Education. The purpose of the Committee was to upgrade the quality of education in the Texas public school system.

In 1986, Mr. Perot was awarded the Winston Churchill Award by His Royal Highness The Prince of Wales.

Dear Mr. Green:

On Thursday evening, May 8, the World Zionist Organization-American Section, and the American Zionist Federation, representing more than one million American Jews, will be sponsoring a celebration in honor of Israel's 38th Independence Day and the Centennary of the birth of David Ben Gurion. On this occasion, we will be paying special tribute to Max Fisher, the preeminent communal leader of American Jewry, by presenting him with the Israel Achievement Award, our highest expression of esteem and respect. We are sure that President Reagan, a long-time friend of Max Fisher, would want to send a message of tribute to Mr. Fisher in recognition of his years of distinguished service to his country and to the American Jewish community.

Since the Israel Achievement Award Ceremony will also launch the Ben Gurion Centennial Year in the United States, the honorable Yitzhak Navon, former President of the State of Israel, will deliver a major address. The event will take place at the New York Hilton Hotel, starting at 8:00 P.M. We expect approximately 500 leading members of the American Jewish community to be in attendance.

REMARKS OF THE PRESIDENT TO JEWISH ORGANIZATIONS

Room 450
Old Executive Office Building

2:07 P.M. EST

THE PRESIDENT: Good afternoon and welcome to the White House complex. That's what we call these buildings -- the White House complex. It's also what you get when you've been around here working here too long. (Laughter.)

But I'm glad to have this chance to meet with you today. As a group of leaders deeply committed to the defense of freedom, I know you understand the truth of what Edmund Burke said over two centuries ago, "When bad men combine, the good must associate, else they will fall one by one, an unpitied sacrifice in a contemptible struggle."

Well, that statement has become even more urgently true today. There's a vote coming up in Congress of utmost importance and I have to tell you, I need your understanding and support. I'm talking about our request for $100 million in aid to the democratic resistant forces in Nicaragua.

Nicaragua may seem a small country, faraway, and why, some wonder, should we care what's happening there? Why should we spend $100 million on someone else's fight? Well, I want to talk about why we must care and why the United States has not only a moral but a strategic interest in supporting freedom in Central America.

There are many things at stake in this vote. The hopes of the Nicaraguan people to live in freedom and democracy; the hopes of the people of Central and South America to live in peace, free from communist subversion. But there's another issue that overrides all others -- the national security of the United States.

Let there be no mistake -- if we fail to provide timely assistance now, if we abandon our allies in freedom and allow the communists to establish a permanent beachhead on the American mainland, we will be living with the consequences for decades to come.

There's been a lot of misinformation floating around about the true character of the Sandinista regime.

Perhaps it would be more accurate to call it disinformation.

I sometimes wonder why people don't just listen to what these communists themselves say, because when they're not up here in Washington lobbying Congress, they're quite open about their true intentions. For instance, take their ties to terrorist groups in the Middle East. Those ties go back more than a decade-and-a-half. Thomas Borge, Nicaragua's Minister of Interior, was one of many Sandinista communists to train in PLO camps in Lebanon and Syria and Libya. To quote Borge's own words: "We say to our brother Arafat that Nicaragua is his land and the PLO cause is the cause of the Sandinistas." Yasir Arafat returned the compliment saying, "The triumph of the Nicaraguans is the PLO's triumph."

Or listen to what the Sandinista communists say about Qaddafi whom they call "our great friend" -- Borge again: "Our friendship with Libya is eternal. Libya is a people which, in accordance with our experience, has developed solidarity without frontiers." Remember that one: "Solidarity without frontiers."

Qaddafi, meanwhile, has been openly sending them millions of dollars of arms, because, he says, the Nicaraguan communists fight with Libya. "They fight America," he put it, "on its own ground."

The Sandinistas have also drawn close to the Iranians. Just last year, the Iranian Prime Minister who's thought to control Iran's terrorist apparatus, said to Daniel Ortega, and I quote again, "We consider your revolutionary country as our own home."

The Sandinista communists have matched their words with actions, joining the PLO in terrorist assaults in the Middle East, including the attempt to overthrow the Hussein government in the hijacking of an "El Al" airliner. The Sandinista terrorist killed in the "El Al" hijacking, Patrick Arguayo Ryan, is revered as a hero by the Nicaraguan government. They even named a large power dam after him.

The Nicaraguan communists claim that they're not anti-Semitic, they're just anti-Zionist. Well, as anti-Zionists, they desecrated Managua's synagogue and drove the small Jewish community into exile. Issac Stavisky, who was there, tells of the anti-Jewish Sandinista graffiti: "Death to the Jewish pigs," with red and black FSLN initials next to it, and "Beware Sandinista justice." Well, what is the official Sandinista position on this persecution of the Jewish community? The Jews, they say, have a, quote, "bourgeois mentality" that prevented them to adjusting to communism. I'll buy that kind of a bourgeois mentality any time.

Managua -- (applause) Managua has also rolled out the welcome mat for terrorists from around the world -- not just Cubans, Bulgarians, Libyans, PLO and Iranians, but members of the Baader, Meinhof gang, the Basque ETA and the Italian Red Brigade. These criminals and lunatics now camp out on the doorstep of the United States. Let's not kid ourselves; the Sandinistas are avowed, dedicated communists, and communists since the days of Lenin have advocated terrorism as a legitimate means to attain political ends. Incidentally, Mr. Lenin's picture is quite prominent on new issues of stamps -- postage stamps in Nicaragua.

If the Sandinistas are allowed to consolidate their hold on Nicaragua, we'll have a permanent staging ground for terrorism. A home away from home for Qaddafi, Arafat and the Ayatollah, just three hours by air from the U.S. border.

The recent terrorist attack in the Palace of Justice in Colombia in which the Sandinista communists were implicated is just the beginning; the first rumblings of a communist earthquake that could overrun Latin America.

The prime ministers of nine of the Caribbean Island nations, when I was in Grenada just a week or two ago, told me that Nicaragua represented the greatest threat to their freedom and democracy, and they brought up the subject to me. They begged us to continue aiding the freedom fighters.

Some still insist that the Sandinistas are only nationalists. The Sandinistas themselves laugh at the idea. They are true international communists who talk of a revolution without borders and who have eagerly put their country at the disposal of Fidel Castro and the Soviet Union.

Everyone who is thinking about this aid package should ask themselves one question: If the Sandinistas succeed in throwing the whole of Central America into turmoil, if the United States must contend with a growing number of hostile, aggressive communist states close to its borders, how willing or able will we be able to meet our commitments to other allies?

Our supply lines to Israel and our NATO allies run through the Caribbean. The Soviets are already banking on this fact. Even some in Congress would rather ignore it. Today, Nicaragua is the focus of Soviet efforts at destabilization in the Western Hemispheres.

If we show ourselves willing to abandon our friends so close to home, how soon before the Soviets turn their full attention to Israel, that lonely outpost of democracy in the Middle East? Freedom is indivisible. The moral foundation of our support for Israel is our support for freedom and democracy. And that support must always remain rock-solid wherever freedom and democracy are endangered. (Applause.)

I want to assure you that I would not consider any measure, including arms sales to moderate Arab nations, if I thought it might endanger the security of Israel. A small, far-away country, some say, but all people that struggle for freedom are close to America's heart.

Recently there's been an intensive effort to discredit the democratic opposition in Nicaragua. Well, let me say a few words about disinformation.

Some of us have been around long enough to know that disinformation has a long history. I remember the reports of Walter Duranty from Stalin's Russia who denied the existence of the forced famine, even though he had witnessed first hand Stalin's genocide. I remember Lincoln Steffens' famous remark when he returned from that land of slaughter and declared, "I have been over into the future and it works." I remember Herbert Matthews' reports on Castro before he came to power, calling him a Democrat and the "Hope of Cuba." And to some of you who are really too young to remember this, even people around our country were calling him the "George Washington of Cuba." And George rolled over in his grave.

Those reports helped shape the climate in Washington in which we cut off aid to Batista and facilitated Castro's march into Havana. And then you remember, once in power, Castro declared -- voluntarily -- yes, I'm a communist, I've always been a communist. He didn't say that until after he was there and in power.

Likewise, we were told that Ho Chi Minh and Pol Pot were nationalists, and this was before the mass exodus of boat people and the murder of a third of the population of Cambodia. History moves on. The smoke screen of lies and disinformation vanishes, and the brutal reality of communism is laid bare, but then, it's too late.

So today we see an orchestrated campaign to slander the freedom fighters. But who shall we believe -- dedicated communists who call American supporters "useful fools?" Or democrats like Adolfo Calero, Arturo Cruz, Alfonso Rebelo, who oppose the Somoza dictatorship as they fight the communist tyranny today? Shall we believe communists, whose definition of morality is what furthers their political ends, who have systematically attacked religious denominations, extinguished civil liberties, and waged an inhuman war against Miskito Indians? Or, believe the people putting their lives on the line for the values that we hold sacred: democracy, freedom, and human rights.

On national television the other night, Jim Wright said that at one time, the revolutionaries in Latin America -- men such as Bolivar and San Martin -- emulated our democratic revolution. Well, some still do. The freedom fighters in Nicaragua fight for democracy, too. They, too, are the moral descendants of men at Morristown and Valley Forge, though the tyranny they fight against is more brutal than anything our forefathers could have imagined.

Soon, Congress will be making the historic decision whether or not to help these brave men and women. The ranks of the freedom fighters continue to swell. If we give them the aid they need, the Nicaraguan people can win this battle for freedom on their own. American troops have not been asked for and are not needed. We must make sure they never are needed. We send men and -- money and material now so we'll never have to send our own American boys.

But if the members of Congress hide their heads in the sand and pretend the strategic threat in Nicaragua will go away, they are courting disaster and history will hold them accountable. If we don't want to see the map of Central America covered in a sea of red, eventually lapping at our own borders, we must act now.

With your help and the help of other freedom-loving Americans, we can succeed in turning the tide to democracy in Nicaragua. We must succeed. Nothing less than the security of the United States is at stake.

Thank you all and God bless you for letting me talk to you. (Applause.)

MR. BIALKIN: Mr. President, you have in this room representatives of the entire organized American Jewish community. We asked for this meeting and for the opportunity to meet with you because we wanted to come here and express to you our admiration and our appreciation to you for being what it is you are.

We have so many things to express our thanks to you for. Most recently, as the leader of this country, in so skillfully managing the transition in the government of the Philippines, we think that we, as all Americans, join with you and the leadership of this country in managing to maintain a friend and preserve freedom and democracy. And we want to express that to you as openly and as firmly as we can. (Applause.)

I have a list which I hope you don't think is too long, Mr. President, but we like you an awful lot. So I'm going to say one or two things. I want to say that we know that the freedom of Anatoly Shcharansky, which you advocated for years and which you urged with Mr. Gorbachev, is due to -- primarily, if not exclusively, to the continued efforts of the United States in support of Avital Shcharansky and her movement and the movement of all freedom-loving people. Anatoly Shcharansky is free. We thank you for that. (Applause.)

We want to assure you, however, that we are not summer soldiers and we know that you're not a summer soldier. The fight for human rights, for freedom in the Soviet Union, indeed, for freedom the world over will go on. We'll be there and we know that you will be there leading us and helping us.

I do want to say that we admire your defense of freedom and your condemnation of terrorism. Your eloquent plea for the Contras to support freedom and democracy in Central America, to preserve the ability to maintain a decent and balanced society, to keep Central America in freedom's camp has touched many of us and will find residence in our community.

As the Chairman of the Conference of Presidents, I would lose my job if I said the whole Conference of Presidents speaks as one in supporting you. But I do know from my own experience and my own expression that while there may not be unanimity -- there never is in a democracy and I assure you we're a democracy -- I believe that the overwhelming sympathy and support of the American Jewish community rides with freedom, rides with the defense of those who wish to fight for their freedom and would support you in your interested and objective and principled effort in that end. (Applause.)

We appreciate and support your strong condemnation of terrorism and your support for the right to react to terrorist outrage is appreciated by all of us, as is your principled and moral and sentimental support for the state of Israel.

We know that the fight to repel terror, to defend Israel and to promote peace leads to concern -- and you know that we have a concern -- about further arming Arab countries, even those who call themselves moderate who do not support the peace process. We recognize it's a complicated issue. We do urge that if arms are to be sold they should be sold only under circumstances where you have reasonable assurances and are fairly confident that the recipients : those arms will move in the direction of peace.

The time has come for the abandonment of the rejection of Israel. That is, the Arab countries, including the moderates, stand on a rejectionist platform. We hope that with your effort and with the pressure and enticement that arms may involve, Mr. President, that you can get them to move toward abandoning their rejection of Israel's right to exist and move toward negotiation. (Applause.)

The principal barrier to peace is that rejection. The threat of assassination and terrorism is something we can't stand. Respectfully, we urge that the time has come in the Middle East for emphasis on economic development and on positive measures to live together. If Egypt and Jordan and Israel can develop a joint economic plan, that may bring peace faster than the sale of arms.

Mr. President, I want you to know that you have here in the entire Jewish community the admiration, to a man and a woman, extensively in every aspect of your quest for freedom. You have our love, our appreciation and our support for all that you do. And we're grateful -- (applause.)

THE PRESIDENT: Thank you. Thank you very much for those very generous words and thank all of you for this warm welcome. And let me just say that with regard to your one sub-point there of -- with regard to arms and to Arabs that are, in that regard, always in our mind -- that is predicated upon our belief that it can further the cause of peace which we're trying to bring about in the Middle East and that we are pledged to the fact that we will never allow Israel to lose its qualitative or quantitative edge by anything we do in that regard. (Applause.)

And you've all been so nice, I can't leave without telling you one little goody. I happen to have a hobby of collecting stories that I understand are told in the communist countries among themselves which reveals the cynicism of their own people. And George Shultz brought me back one from the Soviet Union the other day. It seems they went into the General Secretary and told him there was an elderly lady there at the Kremlin that wouldn't leave without seeing him. And he said, "Well, bring her in." And they did. And he said, "Well, Mother, what is it? What can I do?" She said, "I have one question." She said, "Was communism invented by a politician or a scientist?" And he said, "Well, a politician." She said, "That explains it. A scientist would have tried it on mice first." (Laughter and applause.)

But I do know from my own experience and my own expression that while there may not be unanimity -- there never is in a democracy and I assure you we're a democracy -- I believe that the overwhelming sympathy and support of the American Jewish community rides with freedom, rides with the defense of those who wish to fight for their freedom and would support you in your interested and objective and principled effort in that end. (Applause.)

We appreciate and support your strong condemnation of terrorism and your support for the right to react to terrorist outrage is appreciated by all of us, as is your principled and moral and sentimental support for the state of Israel.

We know that the fight to repel terror, to defend Israel and to promote peace leads to concern -- and you know that we have a concern -- about further arming Arab countries, even those who call themselves moderate who do not support the peace process. We recognize it's a complicated issue. We do urge that if arms are to be sold they should be sold only under circumstances where you have reasonable assurances and are fairly confident that the recipients of those arms will move in the direction of peace.

The time has come for the abandonment of the rejection of Israel. That is, the Arab countries, including the moderates, stand on a rejectionist platform. We hope that with your effort and with the pressure and enticement that arms may involve, Mr. President, that you can get them to move toward abandoning their rejection of Israel's right to exist and move toward negotiation. (Applause.)

The principal barrier to peace is that rejection. The threat of assassination and terrorism is something we can't stand. Respectfully, we urge that the time has come in the Middle East for emphasis on economic development and on positive measures to live together. If Egypt and Jordan and Israel can develop a joint economic plan, that may bring peace faster than the sale of arms.

Mr. President, I want you to know that you have here in the entire Jewish community the admiration, to a man and a woman, extensively in every aspect of your quest for freedom. You have our love, our appreciation and our support for all that you do. And we're grateful -- (applause.)

THE PRESIDENT: Thank you. Thank you very much for those very generous words and thank all of you for this warm welcome. And let me just say that with regard to your one sub-point there of -- with regard to arms and to Arabs that are, in that regard, always in our mind -- that is predicated upon our belief that it can further the cause of peace which we're trying to bring about in the Middle East and that we are pledged to the fact that we will never allow Israel to lose its qualitative or quantitative edge by anything we do in that regard. (Applause.)

And you've all been so nice, I can't leave without telling you one little goody. I happen to have a hobby of collecting stories that I understand are told in the communist countries among themselves which reveals the cynicism of their own people. And George Shultz brought me back one from the Soviet Union the other day. It seems they went into the General Secretary and told him there was an elderly lady there at the Kremlin that wouldn't leave without seeing him. And he said, "Well, bring her in." And they did. And he said, "Well, Mother, what is it? What can I do?" She said, "I have one question." She said, "Was communism invented by a politician or a scientist?" And he said, "Well, a politician." She said, "That explains it. A scientist would have tried it on mice first." (Laughter and applause.)

The Jewish New Year begins with the High Holy Days, Rosh Hashanah and Yom Kippur. These are days of judgment, not by man, but by God, the one eternal God who revealed Himself to the People of Israel. For Jews, these are the Days of Awe, a time for reflection and repentance -- for rededication to the service of God and to His ethical code. This is symbolized most dramatically by the sounding of the Shofar which according to Maimonides says: "Awake, awake, O sleepers from your sleep; O slumberers; arouse ye from your slumbers; and examine your deeds, return in repentance and remember your Creator."

While the Rosh Hashanah and Yom Kippur have special meaning for Jews, they are not special days for Jews alone. At this time of year, all of us should rejoice in the knowledge that ours is a country which has always welcomed Jews and repudiated anti-semitism. As George Washington wrote to the Jewish congregation in Newport, Rhode Island in 1790, the American government is one "which gives to bigotry no sanction, to persecution no assistance."

All Americans can take pride in this, and in our unwavering support for the state of Israel, which was born out of the ashes of the Holocaust and which to this day is a refuge from persecution and a beacon of hope for Jewish people throughout the world. Our deep commitment to Israel's security is one with our commitment to freedom of religion in our own country. Underlying both are the unchanging moral and spiritual values to which Jews and Judaism continue to make an incalculable contribution.

It is therefore a great pleasure for Nancy and me to extend our warmest greetings for the New Year of 5747 to Jews here and throughout the world. May your names be written in the Book of Life, and may the Lord bless you with health and happiness from generation to generation.

Greetings to the men and women of the Armed Forces as you take part in the Days of Remembrance.

Remembrance has a power for good that is all its own, and each of us must use that power as we contemplate the Holocaust -- and its impact on the entire world. We must remember; we must do so for the millions lost, for those who survived, and for the relatives and the descendants of these many people. We must remember as well for humanity itself; in search of the purpose and the strength to utter the words, "Never Again!" and to live by them, as individuals, governments, and nations.

We know that remembrance is possible for both those who have witnessed and those who have heard. My generation cannot forget, but neither must any generation. This Guide from the Department of Defense introduces the history of the Holocaust and analyzes the lessons we must take from it about the human spirit and the good and evil ever before us. There are some in every age who choose evil, not good, and death, not life. If we truly remember, we will choose life.

Let us make our remembrance, then, always in the manner and the spirit of those who liberated the concentration camps and freed and cared for survivors. These soldiers came not in conquest but in compassion, not to kill and enslave but to free and to heal. Let our remembrance ever be thus and it will be a resolution true and noble -- "Never Again."

May every blessing be yours.

Hanukkah, 1986

I am delighted to send greetings to Jewish people the world over as you celebrate Hanukkah. The Jewish festivals are steeped in tradition, and one of the most beautiful of these is that of this "Festival of Lights."

The Hanukkah story tells of the desecration of the Holy Temple and of the persecution of a people whose unbending will it was to live as Jews. It is a story of determination and resolve and, most importantly, of faith in the power of God. It is also the story of a miracle, for it is written that after the victory, the Holy Temple was restored and the vial of oil found in the rubble burned for eight days instead of one. This allowed a grateful people to purify and rededicate the ancient House of Worship to God.

Hanukkah reminds all Americans of our great fortune -- to live in a nation where all are able to practice our religions freely and without fear. At the same time, it reminds us of our obligation to support our Jewish brothers and sisters in the State of Israel and in the Soviet Union where they are still struggling for the basic rights and privileges which we hold so dear and too often take for granted.

Nancy and I share in the joy of your celebration. May its wonderful traditions be an inspiration to everyone, and may the glow of the Menorah candles shed the light of freedom and peace during this Hanukkah season.

While I cannot be with you this evening, I am happy to have this opportunity to wish all of you attending this 28th Biennial Clergy Laity Congress of the Greek Orthodox Archdiocese of North and South America a very successful meeting.

The moral and spiritual values of our religious institutions must be brought to bear on the critical issues of our time, for these values give us both strength and direction.

Let me commend you in particular for your devotion to freedom for our brothers and sisters across the face of the globe. Blessed as we Americans are with freedom, we have a duty to those whose human rights are violated.

Nancy joins me in these greetings. God bless you all.

I am pleased to send greetings to everyone celebrating the tenth anniversary of the New York Jewish Community Relations Council. This has been a decade of great accomplishments.

Your Council advanced the interests of the Jewish community and the entire community by promoting inter-group harmony and cooperation. You have done much to strengthen the bonds between the United States and Israel -- a relationship that is mutually beneficial.

Your founders and Presidents -- George Klein, Rabbi Israel Miller, Richard Ravitch, Daniel Shapiro, Lawrence A. Tisch, Peggy Tishman, and Jack Weiler -- have all been distinguished Americans. To them, I say "Yasher Koach." This speaks well of you since my experience is that organizations invariably attract the leaders they deserve.

Finally, a hearty congratulations to Malcolm Hoenlein, the recipient of your first Jack D. Weiler Jewish Communal Service Award. As your Executive Director, Malcolm has earned the respect of those who have worked with him.

Again, congratulations to all of you for a decade of achievement. I fully expect your next decade to be even more illustrious. Let me also express the wish that your names be inscribed in the Book of Life for happiness and health in the coming year.

Dear Mr. President:

October 28th, 1882 is a day that all of us at Northern Metropolitan Residential Health Care Facility are planning to commemorate. More than 3 years before the Statue of Liberty was even built, one of our residents, Mrs. Cecelia Halper, was born.

Shortly before World War I, Mrs. Halper emigrated from her native Russia to the United States and settled down in the New York area, where she has lived ever since. Her patriotism and fondness for her adopted country shone through at the recent Fourth of July celebration at our nursing home, where she recanted stories of her first exciting glimpse of the Statue in the harbor.

We know that an extra added bonus to our birthday celebration for Mrs. Halper on October 28th would be if you would send birthday greetings to her. These can be sent to the following address:

Mrs. Cecelia Halper

Thank you for your kind consideration.

Respectfully yours,

Morris Klein
