Dear Mr. President

It gives me great pleasure to accept your War Department Identification Card on behalf of the U.S. Air Force and the USAF Museum. It will be added to the USAF Museum collection and permanently recorded as a donation in your name under Accession Number 1981-112 as cataloged on the attached Gift List.

The identification card will be placed on display with your previous donation in our "WW II Celebrities in Uniform" exhibit when it is completed.

Your memorabilia will undoubtedly become a treasured addition to our "WW II Celebrities in Uniform" exhibit and will be admired by millions of people from many nations in future years.

Please allow me to extend my personal thanks to you for your generosity and patronage.

Respectfully yours

Dear Ms. Livingston

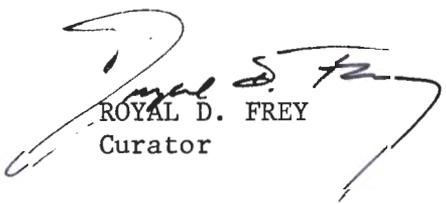

When President Reagan recently sent his World War II AAF overcoat to us for display at the USAF Museum, he enclosed three WW II-era photos for exhibit consideration. He specifically asked me to return these photos to him when we no longer needed them.

I am very reluctant to send them direct to him because of the possibility they might become lost in the routine mail that he undoubtedly receives every day. Therefore, I would be most grateful if you would personally hand them to him at some opportune moment, along with our expression of our deep appreciation for his consideration and support. We intend to use enlargements of all three in our "Captain Ronald Reagan" display.

Enclosed with his three originals are some 8"x10" enlargements should he have any future need for them.

In closing, thank you for your assistance in this matter.

PERSONAL

MEMORANDUM FOR: The Honorable Verne Orr
Secretary of the Air Force
The Pentagon

SUBJECT: RR's World War II Overcoat

The President's friend Barney Oldfield has been working on a project to put RR's WWII overcoat in the Air Force Museum. He has run into a lot of red tape and has written to see whether the President wants him to continue the project or have someone work on it from this end.

I know RR is too busy to get involved in this so thought perhaps someone on your staff could follow through with Mr. Oldfield. I have attached a copy of his letter and the response I wrote for the President.

Thank you for whatever you can do. If you want me to help in any way (i.e., draft a follow-up letter including what you decide), I would be happy to.

Dear Barney:

Nancy and I are out in California for a long weekend, and I am trying to catch up on a few projects while I'm here. Or maybe I should say fit in a few projects between these phone calls they have me making.

I was glad to receive the copy of Max Wilk's and Angela Fox Dunn's articles and enjoyed reading both of them. Thank you, also, for forwarding a copy of The Air Force Museum. I will send a note to Colonel Uppstrom.

Your comments about my overcoat were interesting -- we should have known, shouldn't we. I'm going to forward your letter and a note of explanation to Verne Orr, our new Secretary of the Air Force, and see what he suggests. I'm sure he will have someone on his staff contact you.

Inaugural Week was something Nancy and I will never forget. It was hectic but a very memorable and moving experience. Now we are on with the business we came here to do, and though we both miss California, we are very happy -- and busy.

We both send our love and thank you again for all that you have done and are doing.

Dear Helene von Damm:

In his haste to pack up and flee California, the President may have stashed this somewhere as one of the least of things -- namely, his WW II Army overcoat/ which he stated he would like to give to the Air Force Museum for its Celebrity Wing. When the proffer papers were sent to me, I quickly put them in the mail to the Office of the President-elect in Washington, and it may well have gotten lost in the shift to your present residence (hence, copy attached).

The Air Force Museum naturally is shy about wanting from its level to be corresponding directly with the Commander-in-Chief, so if the papers herewith could be completed, and the coat sent directly to Royal Frey, Curator, The United States Air Force Museum, Wright-Patterson Air Force Base, Ohio 45433.....

Sorry to trouble you with this, but it started sometime ago -- and it will undoubtedly be a charming and much viewed item in the Museum!

With thanks and most cordially,

Dear President Ron:

Our friend, Angela Fox Dunn, has done this piece for the Los Angeles Times Syndicate.

It has gone to more than 300 newspapers in the U. S., and is being fed widely to overseas points.

I have sent a copy to Ron Cochran, who now lives in Boca Raton, Florida. In one newspaper, the Dallas Times-Herald, your barber is in the lead and Angela is getting him a copy of that for his shop's wall. Leave to the old-fashioned a sketch for the Brown Derby!

Best wishes always to Nancy and yourself,

IMMEDIATE RELEASE

How intimates (a barber, a neighbor)

view the unguarded Ronald Reagan

What is Ronald Reagan, the personal man, like? Is he good at answering letters, a regular guy in the barber shop? A considerate neighbor? Writer Angela Fox Dunn went to the sources for the answers.

by Angela Fox Dunn

"If there was a street in town named Normal Boulevard, he'd live on it. He came with a native charm that did everything for him when he was starting out. Why should he change now when he's at the absolute pinnacle? That, I would say, would really take some acting!

That's how Col. Barney Oldfield (not the racing car driver) describes Ronald Reagan's style. Now a corporate director at Litton Industries in Beverly Hills, Oldfield had been actor Reagan's personal publicity man at Warner Brothers in the mid-1940s, and he has never lost touch. Four decades later he was still writing one-liners for Ronald Reagan. "For a period of seven months last year I wrote four gags a day, and mailed them to the various addresses, and I would get little notes from him saying, 'This one went well in Peoria,' or wherever, and 'Keep them coming!' He always acknowledged. But he always does answer letters. If a man is this neat about something called correspondence, it probably says something about the attention he pays to everything that goes on."

One sample from Oldfield's pen for Reagan's use during the campaign: "President Carter reminds me of the Venus de Milo. Like her, think how much more attractive he'd be if we were better armed."

Barney Oldfield has seen a private side of Ronald Reagan. He tells a recent story involving a mutual friend, Ron Cochran, former ABC news anchor man. Cochran wanted to write about the days when he and Reagan were both in radio, but he couldn't recall some of the facts that attended that time in the early 1930s. Barney let Reagan know about it, and four days later Cochran received a phone call in his New York City apartment.

Cochran reported to Oldfield, "I was helping my wife wash the dishes, and the telephone rings, and it's Ronald Reagan. He remembered names and told me incidents I had long forgotten. I was so flabbergasted that I finally said that I hadn't taken a single note. Then Reagan told me he thought I wouldn't so he had the whole thing recorded, and he would send me a transcript."

Within three days Cochran had a nine-page record of the conversation. "Some people in high positions," Oldfield says, "tend to divest themselves of those who really quote can't help anymore unquote. Not Ronald Reagan. As long as there is a relationship there he will never let it die."

A crowd is beginning to gather before noon on tree-lined Linden Drive in Beverly Hills around the entrance to Drucker's fashionable hairdressing salon. Ronald Reagan is expected within the hour. He will have a trim, no shampoo, a manicure, no polish, just buffing, and a shoe shine. Total cost: $16.50. Time involved: about 25 minutes.

He will arrive quietly, as he has done every 10 days for many years, but this time there will be a six-car entourage. The Secret Service will remain outside the shop at Reagan's request. The President will greet everyone, calling them by name, and take a seat in one of Drucker's seven chairs. The owner and proprietor, Romanian-born Harry Drucker, whose voice alternately whispers and booms, whose relationship with Ronald Reagan goes back 44 years, will himself supervise barber Sam Stillo's work.

"We all cut alike," says Drucker. "I created the so-called invisible haircut, and this is what he gets. Always looks the same. A haircut where you shouldn't have to bother too much. Very traditional, very conservative. When he calls up and I'm busy, he takes anybody -- Sam, Harry, Jack. The President-elect was my customer from the first day I arrived here in California in 1937, and he's loyal to me since then."

Any change in Ronald Reagan that Harry has observed? "He's warmer than before, and he's always been wonderful warm. But I'll tell you, when he talks to you, you can feel it -- if he likes you, or if he doesn't care much about you. He has that effect on you. When he talks to me I feel like hugging him. I'm not denying he's done me a lot of good. A lot of people go over to talk to him, and he recognizes who's who, believe me. He's congenial, a gentleman, but he knows, he knows."

The question -- does Ronald Reagan dye his hair? -- is a big bore to Harry. So much so that when a local newspaper reporter pushed him, Drucker put him on. "I said, yes, he uses a bit of tonic. So when the President-elect came in, he said, 'That was a nice story you gave to the paper, very complimentary, but, Harry, you know I don't use any tonic!' And I turned around and said, 'President, don't you want me to sell tonics?' He laughed like a son-of-a-gun!

"I'll tell you that man does not dye his hair, positively not. He's got very healthy hair. And he'll never get bald. But I'm afraid he's likely to get gray when he gets to Washington!"

Will Harry be sent for then? "His main objective is to cut expenses. If he wants it, I'll pay my own fare and go to Washington, and give him a haircut. But he will come here. He will be here quite often. I'm sure."

High in the Santa Ynez Mountains, 30 miles north of Santa Barbara, is the famous Reagan ranch in the sky, Rancho del Cielo, which he has repeatedly called "my personal Shangri-La," 688 acres of oak trees and manzanita bushes, wildflowers, riding trails, a few head of cattle, some horses, and three dogs. The golden retriever is named Victory, and there's a 100-foot pond Reagan calls Lake Lucky. One observer says there's another message in the 100-year-old adobe house with only five rooms -- "It's like hanging out a 'No Vacancy' sign." It is true that some of Reagan's closest friends have never been to the ranch.

The land is fallow, but there's plenty of work to do. The only heat in the house comes from its two fireplaces, and Reagan cuts his own wood, mends his own fences. He restored the old house and built his own pond. No doubt as a child, when his parents never owned their own home, Ronald Reagan yearned for a place that was his. "I can remember as a boy dreaming of $50,000 -- it was the largest amount I could think of -- and what it could do for our family. It was just a fantasy."

But in 1974 he was able to pay over half a million for the mountaintop dream, this place in the high country that rejuvenates him, where he physically controls the environment. It is more than a retreat; it is a sentimental journey home. On a hillside on his land are the tenderly marked graves of two German shepherds, Rhino and Fuzzy. One was son Ron's dog, killed by a car in Los Angeles, the other, one of Reagan's pets, sadly put to sleep out of kindness.

The exclusive Riviera section of the Pacific Palisades, where the Reagans have less land, but a larger home, and a swimming pool instead of a pond, is a celebrity-studded area of older, stately residences with spacious grounds and massive, mature trees. Virtually smog-free, the Reagans enjoy a view of the Santa Monica Harbor, the peninsula down to Palos Verdes, and on a clear day, Catalina Island. So do most of the neighbors, including Lawrence Welk, Vin Scully, Bill Cosby, the Fifth Dimension and, until he sold his home, Sylvester Stallone.

The Reagans are selling the five-bedroom, 4,764-square-foot contemporary ranch style home in a wooded hillside which they built in 1956. It has just been listed by Coldwell Banker Residential Real Estate Services at $1.9 million. Ronald Reagan recently announced that the ranch will be the new Western White House. The money from the sale of the Palisades home will most likely be used to build additions at Rancho del Cielo.

The man who shares a back fence with the Reagans in the Pacific Palisades is Doug Cambern, vice president, Pacific Telephone in Los Angeles, who, with his wife Zoe and family, moved in about seven years ago. "We're not a neighborhood that's prone to street dances," Cambern says. "We all respect each other's privacy. But if you give a large party here, the cars will very quickly edge around the corner. Very seldom, if ever, have there been large groups of people at the Reagan house. My impression is they're very quiet people."

The Camberns and the Reagans also share the same minister, along with 3,000 other members of Rev. Donn Moomaw's Bel Air Presbyterian Church. Carol Lawrence sings in the choir. "We have the most professional choir to be heard in Los Angeles," says Cambern. "The thing I've noticed about Ronald Reagan in church is that he's such a friendly guy. If somebody indicates they want to talk to him, he wants to stop and talk, sometimes to the dismay of those who are attempting to keep an orderly protection. I think he feels that the members of the church are members of his family."

Others have a different perspective. Joe Cerrell, head of Joe Cerrell Associates, a Los Angeles-based public affairs and campaign management firm -- John F. Kennedy, Lyndon Johnson, Hubert Humphrey, Pat Brown and Gov. Jerry Brown have been clients -- remembers noting Ronald Reagan's behavior at the official roll-out ceremony for the first DC-10. "He was governor then, and we were all waiting for the arrival of Vice President Spiro Agnew. If Pat Brown had been governor, he would have been out of the car working the crowds along the fence. But Ronnie just sat in the limousine. I didn't fault him, I think that was part of the mystique.

"Maybe you can be too accessible, like people too much. I'm not sure that Reagan isn't like Adlai Stevenson was (incidentally, same astrological sign). Stevenson liked giving speeches, but he really didn't like one-on-one situations. But I'm not so sure that we want our President to be a gladhander as opposed to a serious man." Cerrell says he understands that Ronald and Nancy Reagan "are not big social hot dogs." But he adds, "There are all sorts of indications that there will be a great increase in Washington social life. That's because the Carters didn't have much at all."

Dear Ron:

It would have been easier if we had given your WW II overcoat to Goodwill Industries.

There are FORMS, which figure.

There are permissions necessary for the Museum to look over your official 201 file to get all the data they use for explanatory caption's correctness.

With this background on the Museum timidity about foregoing "channels", you may wish to have someone in your office take over and handle it overhead. If you wish me to stay in the action, and monitor it for you, I'll be very glad to do so.

The book, as you note on the flyleaf, is yours, a gift of the Air Force Museum ...

Out here in Hollywood, they say your first official act will be to pardon Carter!

Best wishes always,

Colonel Barney Oldfield, USAF (Ret)
Litton Industries

Dear Barney

Your letter of 16 Dec 80 with the copy of President Reagan's letter of 11 Dec 80 to you certainly made our day. I do not know how we will ever be able to express to you our full measure of appreciation.

As much as we dislike having to take advantage of your good nature, we must ask you to assist us once more. Even though AF Reg 210-4 on the USAF Museum Program authorizes us to go direct (rather than through channels) on operational matters, were we to write to our President direct, the Air Staff in the Pentagon would probably have apoplexy. So we must ask you to continue as middleman for a little while longer.

AF Reg 11-26 requires that any item donated to the USAF Museum be legally proffered and it prescribes the proper form to be used. Enclosed for President Reagan's signature is a Proffer of Gift form for the WW II overcoat; it should be returned with the coat at the time it is shipped. Would you please forward it to him with a proper explanation.

One other point -- the historic value of the coat may be used for IRS' purposes. AF Reg 11-26 prohibits us from even suggesting an appraisal value for a donated item -- such must be obtained from another source or estimated by the donor. Once the coat has been received and accessioned into our collection, Colonel Uppstrom, our Director, will send an official letter of acceptance to President Reagan; this letter will serve as proof of donation for the IRS.

Regarding the snapshots which President Reagan mentioned, we would like to borrow them for copying purposes in order to make enlargements for the Captain Ronald Reagan display. Possibly you could arrange to borrow them for forwarding to us. We would return them to you just as soon as they had been copied, probably within a week.

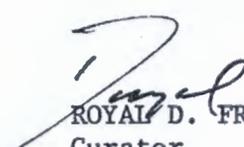

Now, to the last point -- I need to review President Reagan's WW II 201 file at the Federal Records Center in St. Louis for two reasons. Firstly, I need to study his service record for data to use in writing the display text. Secondly, I need to review the file to locate and withdraw for display purposes original documents (such as Oath of Office and Certificate of Service) that contain his signature, thereby making them highly personalized which, in turn, will make them much more interesting to the average visitor to the USAF Museum.

I followed this same procedure for Glenn Miller, Clark Gable, and Gene Raymond. However, before I could withdraw their relevant documents, I had to obtain written permission from the person, his next-of-kin, or his estate (see attached). With reference to President Reagan, I must have his personal authorization or I will never be able to get through the door at the Records Center.

Barney, this would all have been so easy to accomplish back in 1975 when I worked up the "Celebrities in Uniform" exhibit. I imagine I could have then had a few moments of President Reagan's time when I was out there to see Mrs. Gable, Jackie Coogan, Gene Raymond, and Jimmy Stewart. Truthfully, I consider this mental lapse as the "greatest goof" in my 21 years at the USAF Museum. Now, we need you to rescue us.

Also enclosed is a book on the USAF Museum for President Reagan in case he would like some idea of our institution. Please explain to him that it was built with donated funds, presented to the U.S. Air Force as a gift, and personally accepted by President Nixon when he visited with us on 3 Sep 71. Just between you and me, the USAF Museum would be a perfect public forum from which President Reagan could deliver a major policy speech on the necessity for increasing our nation's defense posture, particularly with the XB-70 parked outside. Had it not been for President Kennedy's decision to cancel the B-70 bomber program in Mar 61, the plane would probably be SAC's major nuclear bomber today, instead of the ancient B-52.

Dear Barney:

Just a line to tell you I have found a few snapshots of me in uniform. The beret - summer and winter - and the caps have long disappeared, but I still do have my overcoat so I've kept the letter you sent from Royal Frey, and I will get this out to him as quickly as I can.

My commission was neither CWIC or ROTC. Back in those days - - the 30's, that is - - the Military Manpower Act, I think it was, provided that you could enlist as a candidate for a commission and then do correspondence work plus weekly class and a weekly meeting, in my case, with the cavalry at Fort Ben Hogan, and then take examinations, both in the field and written and oral, and be commissioned if you passed. That's what I did while I was a sports reporter at Ft. Ben Hogan.

Thank you very much for the press secretary information.

The Reagan Library is providing an estimated transcript for this nearly illegible letter from President-elect Reagan to Col. Barney Oldfield.(ret.). For material where we could not translate from the text we have put question marks.

Dear Barney:

Just a line to tell you I found a few snapshots of me in uniform. The blouses – summer and winter and the caps have long disappeared, but I still have my overcoat so I've kept the letter you sent from Royal Frey, and I will get this off to him as quickly as I can.

My commission was neither C?TC or ROTC. Back in those days – the 30s – that is – the Military Manpower Act, I think it was, provided that you could enlist as a cadet for a commission and then do correspondence work plus a weekly class and a weekly meeting, in my class with the cavalry at Fort Des Moines, and then take examinations both in the field and written and oral, and be commissioned if you passed. That is what I did while was a sports announcer in Ft. (?) Des Moines*

Thank you for your tip about the press secretary and best regards.

Sincerely,

Ronald Reagan

Dear President Ron:

All you need is one more picture, but ...

Sometime when there is an occasion, this one might just make a point about the wisdom of decisions. And how bad they can look over time.

This was taken in February, 1955, at the home of Bob and Irene Andrews, just after Capt. Samuel W. Magill, of Ashtabula, Ohio had been on This Is Your Life. Bob Andrews and I were pushing every stop we knew attempting to get some film outfit to do Andrews' script, Tiger By The Tail, for which Chuck Tanner had the option -- and a fellow named Ronald Reagan was in the package to play the Magill role. The prevailing wisdom around Hollywood which said NO was that Ronald Reagan "was through" in motion pictures.

That was 26 years ago! For a guy who was "through", you sure fooled 'em. I heard something about you just last week ...

Best always,

(PS: In the photo, left to right, standing: Ronald Reagan, un-employed; Sid Lund, Universal International; Charles Rhodes, staff photographer, Motion Picture Magazine, Robert Hardy Andrews, writer and host, and Chuck Tanner, the option holder. On the right in front Sam Magill, and I forget the other guy)

Dear President Ron:

That was some day you had yesterday! You picked all of America up off the floor, that's for sure.

Max Wilk's story did run in Variety's 75th Anniversary number as forecast. If you can lay hands on that old film, what a great rapport-setter it could be for a night when you are hosting the Joint Chiefs of Staff -- considering how many places Gen. Hap Arnold lugged it around in the WW II time.

And there is a newly compiled film called "Hollywood and the Air Force", available from either the Air Force Association (202/637-3362) or the Air Force itself, via Lt. Col. Rick Fuller (202/659-9651).

If what you do for an encore equals your opening act, you'll be harder to get off than Al Jolson was when he was hot! And may that be the case.

Best wishes, always,

o Celebs Have Right Of Privacy? Memoirs Tell All

By BORA ALBERT

Van Nuys, Calif.
Do celebrities have a right to hide their private lives from the public? Legally, they don't have the same rights to privacy as other private citizens, though they do have protection against libel, particularly malicious libel.

In this era of intensive personal journalism, very few screen and stage players can keep reporters from writing articles and gossip columns about whom they date, where they live, whom they live with, whether or not they have illegitimate children. Some celebrities cooperate with the press, feeling that fans have a right to know all about them; others zealously try to protect their private lives.

Though the tabloids and the fan magazines are often criticized for "invasion" of celebrities' private lives, selected women's magazines like Ladies Home Journal and popular consumer magazines like Life and Us are full of details about who is living with whom, and personal revelations. How do the celebrities themselves do the celebrities themselves? (Continued on page 98)

Possible Writers, Directors Strikes Cast A Black Cloud Over 1981

By THOMAS M. PRYOR
Hollywood.

It is customary to face a new year with a certain degree of optimism, to say the least. However, it is almost impossible to view 1981 with anything more concrete than faint hope that it won't be worse for Hollywood than the just concluded first installment of the '80s.

The Hollywood community still is feeling hangover effects from the screen actors strike, particularly in the area of television production.

Now the odds appear better than even that the writers won't be working a couple of months down the road — their contract expires Feb. 28. Again the big issue is sharing income from the supplemental markets, the areas that precipitated the three-month Screen Actors Guild/American Federation of Television & Radio Artists work stoppage.

If, through some good stroke of fortune, the employers and the Writers Guild of America should come to peaceful agreement on new contract terms, then the next hurdle will be faced in June, or thereabouts, in contract negotiations with the Directors Guild of America. Again the prospects for quick and painless agreement are about as good as those of a snowball in hell.

The principal reason for the prolonged and costly strike in the case of the actors was that manage- (Continued on page 98)

It Was 'Bloopers' Duty At Ft. Roach For Hollywood Crew

By MAX WILK
Beverly Hills.

It wasn't at Valley Forge, it was at Culver City, Calif. But it was during the winter and we were at war — 1943-44. Little could any of us Air Force personnel who were part of the First Motion Picture Unit out there know — or even fantasize — that our Adjutant, Capt. Ronald Reagan, AUS, would someday, years later, become our Commander-in-Chief, the President.

If we had been gifted with such a crystal ball, perhaps we might have had more of a sense of history about the whole thing.

As it is, now the story can be told. Somewhere in a film can, buried in an Air Force vault, is a reel of wartime film which makes Bohème For Boys, one of the President-elect's classic "hardcore" material.

It's the famous "bloopers" reel which FMPU personnel made at the Express command of Gen. H.H. Arnold, then Commander of the Air Forces.

Early in '42, "Hap" Arnold had decided he wanted his army of the service to have its own film unit, rather than to rely on the Signal Corps. He moved full speed ahead. Through a mutual friend, Bill Guthrie, an ex-Air Corps pilot who at that time had become one of Jack Warner's chief executives and stu- (Continued on page 98) have the immediate dramatic impact of halting production, as happened with the actors' strike. However, the tv script reserve would be expended more rapidly than that of the motion picture. On the other hand, a prolonged writers work stoppage would make its effects felt on the production line several months after settlement.

Should the directors elect to stop working, then production will grind to a halt just as dramatically as it did when the actors walked. The expectation is that whatever the writers get over what the actors got, the directors in turn will seek to better in money terms as well as work conditions particular to their function.

Management, of course, expects to maintain the same solidarity that prevailed over the course of the actors strike. Thus, from the perspective of the moment, it would appear that 1981 is going to be pretty much a repeat of 1960, only the tensions and the agonizing could be doubled. Hardly a combination of circumstances which warrants a happy forecast for this new year for Hollywood.

Fort Roach

studio manager, Arnold established contact with Warner. Eventually Warner put on a uniform, assumed the rank of Lieutenant Colonel, and went to work to provide Arnold with what was to become FMPU.

The plant the Air Force acquired was Hal Roach's Culver City comedy-factory, and it was staffed with the best available Hollywood technicians. As a sort of executive producer of the operation, Gen. Arnold was treated with double the usual quota of respect by his Culver City troops, who were writers, directors, actors and technicians assembled by Warner, with the help of local draft boards.

FMPU would turn out vital films for training, propaganda and for documenting the fighting. FMPU crews went aloft in battlefields all over the world. FMPU films, such as Col. Willie Wyler's "Memphis Belle" are still shown as examples of superb documentary.

One evening, Arnold, on an inspection tour, was entertained by Warner, now back in civilian life, at Warner's home. After dinner Warner showed his "ex-boss" the legendary Warner "blow-up" reel, a hilarious assemblage of outtakes — scenes of Bette Davis blowing her fans, Basil Rathbone trying on endless helmets for "Robin Hood," Humphrey Bogart, Edward G.

talents who in peacetime would have cost a studio payroll five-figures per week — rushed out impromptu gag scenes, and then turned them over to equally skilled G.I. directors, crews and actors for filming.

The technicians worked through the night. The following day, on various sound stages, cameras rolled. Pvt. George Montgomery bid his fiancée a tearful farewell as he departed for overseas. One last cigarette? He pulled out his lighter, flicked it, flicked it — and finally exploded in a frustrated curse.

In the cockpit of a two-seat trainer, with a process screen behind it, Cpl. Barry Nelson gave flying instructions to a rookie. High above the earth they soared — until behind them, in front of that process shot of fluffy clouds, two G.I. technicians, carrying a ladder, tip-toed across!

Reagan Makes A Point

There were half a dozen other such shots, and then Capt. Ronald Reagan as a top-brass C.O. appeared, briefing combat crews on their next mission. "Our target for tonight, gentlemen, is this" he growled, and pointed to a nearby wall map. On cue, the map flipped upwards; there on the wall beneath was revealed the full-length picture of a lush pin-up girl!

The "blooper" reel was put together in Maj. Warren Low's editing-rooms that night, and then a courier flew it to the Pentagon where, it was reported, it met with great amusement from Gen. Arnold and his staff. Mission accomplished — what the hell, he was fighting a global war full-time. Certainly he was entitled to a few minutes of relaxation.

And the FMPU personnel went back to making films — each had no gags in them whatsoever — but were strictly designed to help defeat the Axis.

"Won The Battle, But..."

We must have been doing something right, because that was a war we won. (Although, if you stand on Culver City's Washington Blvd. 35 years later and watch the Hondas, the Toyotas, the Datsuns... the BMW's and Volkswagens and Mercedes go by, with Blaupunkt and Sony radios playing gaily, you may wonder who in fact did win.)

As for ex-Capt. Reagan, the voters liked his audition scenes. They picked up his option and put him to work for a four-year term, starting Jan. 20.

Now, when my granddaughter climbs into my lap to ask me, "Grandpa, what did you do in the war?" I recall her with head back and shoulders back, "I was ilarious assemblage of outtakes — scenes of Bette Davis blowing her lines, Basil Rathbone trying on endless helmets for "Robin Hood," Humphrey Bogart, Edward G. Robinson, Paul Henreid and others in moments of awkwardness and embarrassment — all in 10 minutes' worth of private jokes.

Arnold laughed heartily, and next day called Col. Owen Crump, then the C.O. at Fort Roach, to ask if it would be possible to see whatever reel of outtakes had been amassed at his studio. He thought it would be pleasant to show it down at the Pentagon to amuse his hard-working colleagues. When might he have that reel in Washington?

There was no such reel, but Crump knew better than to turn down a four-star general. He promised the reel forthwith.

The following morning at 7:30, all other work was suspended at the Writers Building (known as the home base of the Flying Typers). All troops went to work on a top-

Now, when my granddaughter climbs into my lap to ask me, "Grandpa, what did you do in the war?" I can tell her, with head high and shoulders back: "Honey, I was in the President's net."

conclusion I had made after a series of lectures at the nation's two leading business schools, Harvard and Wharton, where I was astonished to note so many knowledgeable young women taking graduate courses to become entrepreneurs in finance, real estate, the arts and motion pictures.

During all of '60s and '70s, while speaking at many other colleges, the most frequent query from students had to do with the future of the film business. Again and again, I predicted the time would come in the not-too-distant future when a
