DATE: APRIL 3, 1981

TO: RICHARD DARMAN

FROM: MICHAEL K. DEEVER

This is a Forward which will be signed by Ronald Reagan for the White House Tour Book. He needs to sign off on this when he feels like it.

THE PRESIDENTS: FORWARD

The Presidency -- "a splendid misery."

Thomas Jefferson would lament the "loss of friends" caused by its hard decisions. Teddy Roosevelt said it was a chance to make "some kind of a place in history . . ." but would note that even a President's powers are limited -- "Sometimes I wish I could be President and Congress too."

He had never dreamed "such loneliness and desolation of heart possible," Woodrow Wilson would write of his duties. Most assuredly, "not a rosewater affair. This is an office in which a man must put on his war paint," the scholar-President said.

And Harry Truman -- blunt as usual, succinct as usual: "Being a President is like riding a tiger. A man has to keep on riding or be swallowed."

Today the office remains what it has been for those Presidents: an opportunity, a burden, sometimes a delight, always a tiger.

In those first few days after an inauguration, before an administration settles in, a President and those who work with him will frequently find themselves stopping short -- perhaps at the South Portico awaiting the arrival of a foreign leader or during a walk from the West Wing past the Rose Garden into the residence. Suddenly, inexplicably, the force of history causes one to stop and reflect on the greatness of the place and the men who have gone before them there.

The story of that greatness is found here in the pages of "The Presidents." A few were greatly gifted; some made notable mistakes; many were good hearted; most did their best; all were patriots.

About the intentions of those men who have occupied this office, James Buchanan said: "I have no other object of earthly ambition than to leave my country in a peaceful and prosperous condition, and to live in the affections and respect of my countrymen."

Those words are the reason for a small fledgling Nation's survival and growth: the honesty of her good intentions.

Today, the very basis of those good intentions -- the idea of self-government under God -- is gravely challenged. Yet, reading these pages, one cannot help but take heart that always, at the moment of great crisis, America has mustered more than good intentions; she has always found wise leadership, resolute spirit, and decisive action.

A President must provide a good part of that leadership, spirit, and action. The President must speak for America's intentions and set her national agenda. And though he can shape events in this way, he must also respect and reflect the honest desires and good wishes of his countrymen.

This is the paradox of public office and especially the high office of the Presidency: One must serve the people but be willing to lead them, too, in sometimes new or controversial directions.

No one suffered more during his duties, and no one stood more upright than Abraham Lincoln. So it should not surprise us that it was Lincoln who stated a simple but eloquent criterion for success:

"I desire so to conduct the affairs of this administration that if at the end, when I come to lay down the reins of power, I have lost every friend on earth, I shall at least have one friend left, and that friend shall be down inside of me."

There is good advice here, but not just for Presidents. It is good advice for a country. It is advice that should be thought upon and followed by all our citizens. One's first duty is always to conscience -- which is another way of saying, especially in the case of America -- to God and the human freedom He enjoins. The recognition of this duty began this Nation, and I am confident will inspire it during the proud centuries and many Presidencies ahead.

Dear Nancy and Ron:

It is impossible to express the sense of both shock and pride that Frances and I have over the events of this week; shock at the event and pride in the courage and leadership you have both displayed.

I know you are hearing from many friends and thousands of supporters and plain citizens.

We add our own expressions of friendship and faith that you will soon be totally recovered.

I have been thinking also about the situation of Jim Brady, whom Frances and I have come to know socially during a number of dinners we have jointly attended in Washington. His wife and he are very fine people, and we have much enjoyed being with them.

I have the feeling that something should be done to help them over the years ahead, particularly in the case of their children, and would very much like to assist in establishing some sort of trust fund.

I don't know how to proceed on this. Perhaps the idea has already come to Ed Meese or others on your staff, but if not, I would like to suggest it and say that I stand ready to respond to any guidance I might receive.

Ours is a great country and you are a great leader of it. I am confident that we have passed another crisis and that the years ahead will be the better for it.

Respectfully,

talking about.

Dear Mr. Deaver:

I read with great interest Saul Friedman's account of the way in which you, Ed Meese and James Baker III "ran" the U.S. during the critical moments in the nation's history last Monday. I hope that you saw the article (Section A, page 27A), for I thought it was both appreciative and insightful.

It was good to come to "know" you a bit better, even from a distance. And while I am sure that your own self-concept is broad-ranging, I was particularly struck by the fact that Friedman perceives you as having "a taste for art and a touch of irreverence." I hope that he was especially accurate in using the latter phrase, for that is what motivates my writing. I find so little of that quality in bureaucratic circles...or if it's there, it is well buried via PR announcements, "proper" behavior, etc. And I do want to say something irreverent!

In view of Al Haig's behavior, not only last Monday but also throughout his secretaryship, I do hope that persons such as yourself are doing what you can to puncture the stuffed shirt qualities which come across in the media and in approximately 99.44% of his public pronouncements. Sometime, sooner if not later, I hope that the American people will begin to see the sawdust begin to drip thru the punctures in the stuffed shirt or between the cracks in the fruit salad on his military chest. Above all, it seems to me that he may wish to be encouraged (or perhaps he should be ordered, military style!) to go back and take a course in Political Science 101 so that he will at the very least know who succeeds the president in the event of demise or incapacity.

Continuing the element of irreverence: A TV note indicates and Saul Friedman suggests that he got from the Situation Room to Larry Speakes's side in something like 2 minutes and 7 seconds (or the like). Somebody, you, Baker or Meese may have to learn to outrun him, outspeed him, something! The entire fate of the country could hang on those precious seconds. Since you are the younger of the triumpherate who "ran the U.S." (to use Friedman's words), maybe you'll need to train harder. Or, if not, find a special assistant's position for one of the trackmen unable to get to last summer's Olympics... to get there in less than 2.7 minutes and hold off Haig and/or his own surrogates.

You see, Mr. Deaver, it has always been my contention that the White House needs a jester to make such observations. I make no pretensions of applying for such a position; but my visit to the Carter White House to visit a former student (serving as a presidential assistant) confirmed my contention about the need for the jester. Hence, I send all good thoughts & am

Dear Malcolm:

Your kind letter finds us all well and recovering from the loss of Frank.

I know of your frequent exchanges with Frank over the years and would not want you to reduce your thoughtful expressions concerning world events.

With regard to the reductions in education, science and engineering, it is our hope that the President's Program for Economic Recovery can bring about dramatic increases in private sector investment. Incentives, that are part of the program, would increase private investment in the high technology fields to close the gap you describe that exists between us and the Japanese.

You mentioned a recollection of "low taxes" and "freedom from regulations." Well, we are not ever likely to have low taxes, nor will we be free of regulations. Our program is designed, however, to leave more than $400 billion dollars in the pockets of the American taxpayer during the next few years, while at the same time reducing the $100 billion dollar-a-year cost of regulations that business passes off to the consumer. These are actions that will help bring down the rate of inflation. Our program, when combined with lower inflation rates, will do more for all of the American people than any federal program has ever done. Just wait and see.

Keep in touch.

This is to let you know that I was very pleased to receive your letter and to hear of your efforts in establishing the Center for the Study of Educational Leadership. I forwarded your letter to Secretary of Education T. H. Bell, and his staff was very complimentary in responding to my request and your suggestions.

Information which the Center generates should be particularly useful to the Department of Education. The President's proposals for consolidating approximately forty-five elementary and secondary programs into two major block grants should result in considerable change in the relationships among the Federal, state and local agencies now responsible for education. Reducing administrative costs, while assuring that dollars are targeted on our most pressing educational needs, will continue to be important Federal concerns.

Please keep me informed of your progress and I will be pleased to forward any reports you may prepare to appropriate officials associated with the formulation of Federal educational policy.

Dear Mike:

Just a note both to commiserate and to praise. My heart went out to you and to the President as I viewed that awful film clip. I suppose that all of us who work for public figures have contemplated the possibility of violence, but to have it come so near to succeeding and so early in your administration makes it doubly horrifying. I pray that this insanity will end.

Yet while the event itself was sick and tragic, the President's response and the reaction of your people is nothing short of miraculous. People the world over have been cheered by Mr. Reagan's courage and composure. I have been no less admiring of his staff. To have a friend and associate grievously injured, to be threatened directly yourself, but to rise above personal grief and work instead to reassure a nervous public and forestall any adventures by our enemies, is real grace under pressure.

I regret not seeing you during the President's visit to Ottawa (I was working on the details of the evening gala event), but I hope we can renew our acquaintance before the next visit in July.

In the meantime, the President and your country are often in my thoughts.

MEMORANDUM FOR MICHAEL K. DEEVER

FM: Joseph W. Canzeri
RE: U. S. Capitol Historical Society

If you'll recall, the man I introduced to you in the hall at noon is Conrad Heine, an old friend of mine. He is presently the Director of the U.S. Capitol Historical Society. He is very serious, competent, and a Reagan fan for as long as I can remember.

He has written a paper dealing with some additional budget cuts that do not affect research and weapon development, or social security. On balance, these seem to be some pretty good ideas, and I think someone ought to take a look at them. I'd like to know your thoughts on this.

Also, attached is some background on the U.S. Capitol Historical Society. Perhaps you and Carolyn would be interested in a private tour some time. That would be easy to arrange; just let me know.

April 8, 1981

Dear Mr. Hanley:

In response to your letter of March 17 regarding the use of trumpets to announce President Reagan's entrance at official functions, I am not sure to what you refer.

The US Army Herald Trumpets are normally included in White House ceremonies involving visiting chiefs of state or heads of government. International protocol requires that proper honors be paid to those visiting dignitaries. On these occasions the Herald Trumpets are utilized both to announce the President and to announce the visiting chief of state or head of government. The Herald Trumpets were organized during President Eisenhower's administration and were first used in July of 1959 in ceremonies welcoming Queen Elizabeth and Prince Phillip to Chicago for the opening of the St. Lawrence Seaway. Their use continued in White House ceremonies until the beginning of the Carter Administration. Due to public criticism, they were gradually phased back into many ceremonies.

There have been two unique occasions during this administration when the Herald Trumpets were used exclusively for the President: at the Inauguration Ceremonies and the White House ceremony honoring the return of the hostages.

The remarks that you heard may have been referring to ruffles and flourishes and "Hail to the Chief", which make up honors that are traditional and expected to be afforded to our President. These normally are played by a band element of approximately 19 or more pieces, not by trumpets. Enclosed are copies of fact sheets on the origin of "Hail to the Chief", which you may find interesting.

I agree that President Reagan possesses natural dignity; however, as the President of the United States, he certainly deserves the proper respect, recognition and honors that go with the Office of the Presidency. These honors are an accepted standard.

I am sorry that I cannot be more specific without you identifying what ceremonies/official functions that are being criticized.

Thank you for your assistance last week in our efforts to postpone FCC consideration of the cellular communications proceeding. As you are probably aware, the Commission voted to adopt the Staff's proposal giving an exclusive allocation of spectrum to the wireline carriers.

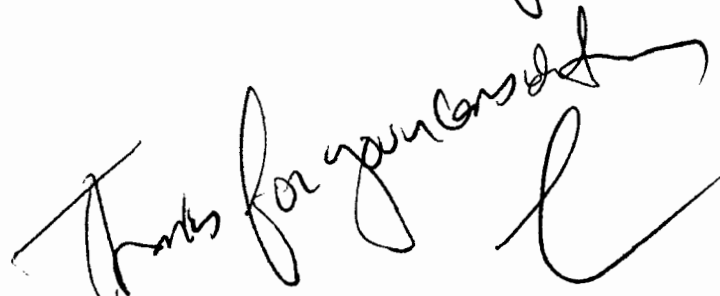

We are disappointed with the outcome of the April 9th meeting. However, because of the blatantly anti-competitive ramifications of the Commission's allocation scheme (and one Commissioner's dissent on that issue), we feel optimistic about our chances for victory on appeal or FCC reconsideration.

Dear Jim:

Thank you very much for your idea about the Robert Service one-man play idea.

I have sent this on to Muffie Brandon, the First Lady's Social Secretary. We will give it some thought and perhaps we will be back in touch with you, should we find an appropriate evening.

Many thanks.

Sincerely,

MICHAEL K. DEEVER

Dear Mr. Baker:

Thank you for your kind letter and your understanding about the President's schedule.

I know if the President and Mrs. Reagan were able to, they would love to attend the Poly Royal celebration. Unfortunately, because of the recent accident, President Reagan's schedule will be limited.

I have sent on to him the original cartoon, which I can assure you, he enjoyed greatly.

Many thanks.

Sincerely,

Dear Betty and Barbara:

Thanks for being good enough to send my drops along. I certainly appreciate your prompt response.

We're all doing fine now, and are grateful for the outcome. Thanks for your concern.

I'm enclosing an autographed picture as you requested.

Sincerely,

MICHAEL K. DEEVER
Assistant to the President
Deputy Chief of Staff

Dear Pat:

Thank you for your nice letter and for the obvious concern. March 30th was, indeed, a Black Day, but we are all tremendously pleased with the outcome.

The President enjoyed the children's letters, as we all did. Thanks for sending them along.

Sincerely,

MICHAEL K. DEEVER

Dear Mrs. Eisen:

In light of the events of March 30th, I am returning your letter unanswered, as I am sure you would want to keep your comments to yourself.

Sincerely,

MICHAEL K. DEAVER

Dear Jim:

Thanks for your comments about Jim Kuhn and Marti Frucci. While I have known for some time of their capabilities, it's particularly nice to hear from the Governor of Illinois that our people are doing such good work.

We are grateful, also, for your help with the Brady family.

Everyone's doing fine and we are all very thankful for the outcome.

Warm regards,

MICHAEL K. DEEVER

Dear Tom:

Congratulations!

I know you are doing a fine job because Ambassador Annenberg told me so. Good luck and let me know if I can be of any help.

Sincerely,

MEMORANDUM

TO: RICH WILLIAMSON

FROM: MICHAEL K. DEAVER

SUBJECT: Western States Legislative Forestry
Task Force

In light of our discussion at the Scheduling meeting last week, I am not sure we want to consider the Western States Legislative Forestry Task Force as a priority item for the President.

Would you agree?
