Dear Mike:

Thank you for your good letter of February 15 as well as for the encouraging NAHB poll. We were very pleased to know that two-thirds of your membership voted to "stay the course."

Despite recent difficult economic conditions in the home building industry, your membership understands that defeating inflation and reducing the increasingly dangerous rate of federal spending is the key to economic recovery. Throughout the difficult months of 1981 and 1982 your membership continued their courageous stand behind the President's program.

It is now clear that their sacrifices have not been in vain, and that the President's course of action on spending, taxes and regulation has been vindicated. The economic recovery now underway is clearly going to be enjoyed by NAHB members.

Our task now is to finish the job of keeping the recovery on course. Your continued support will be necessary to achieve that end.

On behalf of the President, please accept our heartfelt gratitude and appreciation to your readers. The President is heartened because he knows he can count on them.

Sincerely,

MEMORANDUM FOR MICHAEL K. DEEVER

FROM:

WAYNE H. VALIS W.H.V.

SUBJECT:

Presidential Attendance at the National Association of Home Builders
1984 Convention

As you know, the President has addressed the Associated General Contractors and the Realtors. ~~He has yet to address the NAHB.~~ This group has slightly over 200,000 members, has been enormously supportive and is quite active at the federal, state and local levels.

The NAHB convention was attended, even in this recession year, by 40,000 members. In 1984 its President will be Pete Herder who chaired the President's Housing Commission.

Quite bluntly, Herder and the NAHB will be prepared to give the President maximum support in '84. For all of these reasons, I would hope that you would give the strongest consideration to having the President attend this convention (January 21-24) since I believe politically it will be the most important business convention of the year.

~~Attached is a draft response to send to the NAHB Builder magazine.~~

Dear Mike:

Thanks for letting me know the other day that you got the word. ~~It was a good one.~~
You looked good with that shovel, how's your back?

I was pleased with the poll results, and I knew you'd like them too. Philosophically, homebuilders are a good group for you. A big group too; we have 175,000 readers.

~~If you would be so kind as to let me know whether about this I would like to~~ ~~publish it in the magazine.~~ We conducted the poll at the National Association of Home Builders' convention in Houston; 1200 people participated, 65% of whom voted to stay the course. Someone can call my office (822-0527) if you need more background.

Best,

Nobody makes a bet figuring to lose, but this was a bet I was certain I would win. Well, I lost. In fact, it wasn't even close.

I made the bet with Mike Wood, the publisher of BUILDER. At stake was a dinner, with our wives, at one of Washington, D.C.'s finer and more expensive restaurants. The results of a poll BUILDER conducted at the NAHB show in January in Houston would determine the winner.

We set up the poll to determine how much support the Reagan Administration's economic policies have among members of the housing industry. Those who felt Reaganomics were helping housing would vote to "stay the course," while those who felt the President's policies were hurting housing would vote to "change the course."

From the start I figured the majority would support Reaganomics, and so did Mike Wood. But he thought 58 percent would support the President. I didn't see how three out of every five people in the housing industry, an industry hurting so badly, still could be on the President's side.

As it turned out, Reaganomics won in a landslide. Some 1,200 people voted in the poll, and 65 percent, or almost two-thirds, voted to "stay the course."

Maybe I'm just a sore loser, but I still can't figure out why. Probably those who attended the NAHB show last week, through the downturn in reasonably good shape and weren't as frustrated as others who stayed home. Maybe there was some confusion about what Reaganomics really is; even the President in one of his regular radio addresses said "it sounds like a fad diet or an aerobic exercise." And certainly the mood at the convention, based, I guess, on the recent drop in interest rates and a rebound in housing starts, was that the worst is over.

But I recognized all that when I made the bet and thought the sorry state of the economy and the abysmal state of the housing industry would weigh more heavily against the President.

And I still think they should. For the most part, Congress has given President Reagan what he wanted, and this is what we have received in return:

□ the highest level of unemployment since the Depression;

□ a 2.4 percent decline in 1982 in the real GNP, the measure of the nation's total output of goods and services;

□ the biggest spread ever between the rate of inflation and interest rates, including mortgage interest rates;

□ a projected $200 billion federal deficit in 1984—three times larger than any pre-Reagan deficit, according to the Washington Post;

□ industrial output running at two-thirds capacity, a post-World War II low; and, of course,

□ the lowest level of housing starts and new home sales since the Depression.

That's not all. The President has gutted the HUD budget, all but eliminated federally funded housing production programs, vetoed major emergency housing legislation, accepted with little comment the recommendations of a Presidential housing commission that eschewed "a belief in the potency of government programs and policies" to assure an adequate supply of decent, affordable housing, supported legislation that makes thrifts less likely to be a major force in the mortgage market and appointed as chairman of his Council of Economic Advisers a man who repeatedly has said housing draws too much capital from other more productive industries.

Yes, I know inflation has abated. But given everything else that has happened to the economy, if it hadn't it would have been necessary to revise every law of economics, beginning with the law of supply and demand.

So all in all the President has a record I would not want to run on. But run he did, and in our poll, at least, he won.

For me there was one small consolation. Those who voted in the poll were eligible for a drawing for a two-week Caribbean cruise. The lucky builder who won voted to "change the course." I'll toast him at our dinner.

THE WHITE HOUSE

WASHINGTON

March 15, 1983

Dear Mr. Rockefeller:

Thank you for your letter concerning the role of outdoor recreation in American life. The report provides a useful perspective on outdoor recreation and the changes that occurred over the past 20 years.

I appreciate your concerns and recommendations with regard to opportunities for expanding outdoor recreation opportunities. Your recommendation for a new commission to be funded to study this situation is an interesting one, and this Administration will give it full consideration.

Sincerely,

MICHAEL K. DEAVER

Dear Mr. Deaver:

In early February, the Outdoor Recreation Policy Review Group issued a report that recommended that Congress create a national commission to study the role of outdoor recreation in American life. I am pleased to send you a copy of the report.

This work was completed 20 years after a report by the Outdoor Recreation Resources Review Commission (ORRRC) to the President and Congress, which set outdoor recreation policy for two decades. Outdoor recreation has become even more important in American life than envisioned by that report.

Because of the many changes since that report, a number of citizens and organizations suggested that it would now be appropriate to review our nation's outdoor recreational needs. The administration and leaders in Congress encouraged this fresh effort.

In its 1962 report, ORRRC had recommended, among other things: creation of the Land and Water Conservation Fund to provide money for park acquisition and development; creation of a focal point for federal outdoor recreation policy in the Bureau of Outdoor Recreation; and creation of a new series of national systems including wilderness, wild and scenic rivers, and trails. The report also emphasized the importance of outdoor recreation in American life and urged a national commitment to providing outdoor recreation opportunity.

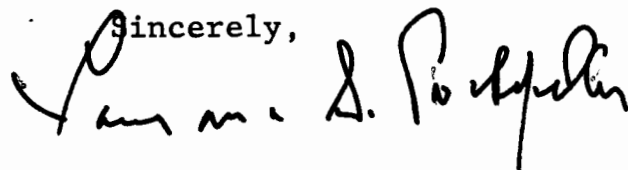

As I had served as ORRRC chairman, last year I called together six people with demonstrated leadership in the field of outdoor recreation and asked them to work with me as the Outdoor Recreation Policy Review Group in preparing an assessment of the current status of outdoor recreation.

We find that Americans are participating in outdoor recreation as never before and they want even more of it. Outdoor recreation is an important component of current concerns for physical fitness and constructive use of leisure time. It is a major part of the environmental quality movement. Outdoor recreation is big business and an important source of jobs.

Since the ORRRC submitted its report, there has been a major increase in the provision of recreation opportunity by government at all levels and the private sector. In recent years, however, governments' efforts have leveled off and actually decreased. Today outdoor recreation is on hold.

We conclude that outdoor recreation policy needs to be revitalized and recommend that Congress establish a new outdoor recreation resources review commission to conduct a study of policy and program needs.

Should you find that you are interested and in agreement, we are hopeful that you would support a new commission with regard to legislation and funding.

Sincerely,

Laurance S. Rockefeller

February 11, 1983

Dear Mr. President:

I am pleased to send you an assessment of the status of outdoor recreation in America twenty years after the report of the Outdoor Recreation Resources Review Commission. That Commission, created by Congress in the Eisenhower Administration, was made up of eight members of Congress and seven citizens appointed by the President. It reported to President Kennedy in 1962.

The ORRRC report, in many ways, set outdoor recreation policy for the ensuing years. Among its principal recommendations were:

- the creation of the Land and Water Conservation Fund, which provided funding for federal and state acquisition and development;

- the creation of a focal point for outdoor recreation in the federal government in the Bureau of Outdoor Recreation;

- the creation of a new series of systems including wilderness, wild rivers and trails.

Perhaps most importantly, the report emphasized the importance of outdoor recreation in American life and urged a national commitment to the goal of affording outdoor recreation opportunities for the people of this country. Over the past two decades, much has been accomplished in fulfilling that commitment through implementation of ORRRC's recommendations. The result has been substantial expansion of recreation opportunities at the federal, state and local levels. Further, private enterprise has contributed significantly to the increase in outdoor recreation. While supply has increased, so have demands upon outdoor recreation resources. In addition, there have been enormous changes in American life.

Upon the occasion of the twentieth anniversary of the ORRRC report, a number of citizens and organizations suggested that it would be an appropriate time to review the status of outdoor recreation since that report in the light of the changes that have occurred. Secretary of the Interior Watt and leaders in Congress encouraged this effort.

As the Chairman of the ORRRC Commission, I called together six people who have demonstrated leadership in the field of outdoor recreation and asked them to work with me in preparing an assessment of the status of outdoor recreation. The attached report is the product of our work. It is an informal appraisal and is not an in-depth study of any kind. It does represent the view of informed people who have had the benefit of assistance from a small staff and a small group of consultants.

We find that outdoor recreation is more important in American life than ever. It is clear that Americans are participating in outdoor recreation as never before and they want even more of it. Outdoor recreation is a major part of the environmental quality movement and of the concerns for physical fitness and wise use of leisure time. Outdoor recreation is also now a big business and an important source of jobs. Some $244 billion is spent annually on leisure activities in this country, much of it in outdoor recreation.

Since the ORRRC report, there has been a greatly increased effort by all levels of government and particularly the private sector. In recent years, however, starting about 1978, the government effort has leveled off and actually decreased. In the past two years, the lead agency in charge of outdoor recreation has been dismantled and the primary source of federal and state funding, the Land and Water Conservation Fund, is not being funded. In short, we find outdoor recreation policy is on hold.

Our group finds that it is time for a review, reassessment and revitalization of national outdoor recreation policy. To this end we would recommend that the establishment of a new outdoor recreation resources review commission should be considered by you and the Congress. Because the old model seemed to work so well, we suggest that a bipartisan commission made up of eight members of Congress and seven citizens might again be effective. We recommend a small independent staff and about an 18-month study.

The commission should review the changes in the country, changes in the supply of outdoor recreation and the demand for it in light of these changes. It should also be mindful of the increased awareness of the limits to what government at all levels can do and what resources are available to meet the nation's needs. Within these limits, we think the commission could set forth recommendations for the roles of the various levels of government and ways to make the private sector even more effective.

We hope this preliminary study will be useful to you and the Congress and stand ready, if any of us can be helpful in furthering this work.

Sincerely,

Dear Mike,

What a pleasure it was to have a small participation at the Courthouse as one of your planned events for the Queen's tour.

Let me express my admiration for your "hatching", "nurturing", and "bringing off", a truly B O D A C I O U S IDEA.

I'd sure be pleased to pour a margarita for you and everybody at this year's Fiesta in the first week of August.

Thanks again for including Old Spanish Days.

Dear Mike:

With reference to my letter to you of December 29, 1982, regarding M.L. Hughes of Martin Marietta, I wish to thank you for your follow up and contact. Mr. Hughes was contacted and interviewed by Gen. Russel from National Security and they apparantly have had a number of discussions.

On another subject, Michael, back in 1980, I had made contact with your office and that of the Hon. William French Smith regarding possible consideration for an appointment with the administration. My initial contact was assisted by Mr. Holmes Tuttle of this city. Congressman Lagomarsino, our mutual friend J.J. Hollister and others wrote letters of recommendation on my behalf. I did have the oppurnity to visit with Kenneth Starr and the Attorney General but personal circumstances precluded my further consideration of an appointment at that time.

Now, after practicing law for nineteen years in Santa Barbara Calif., I feel that I do now wish to devote part of my life to public service and especially for the current administration. I pray to God that President Reagan will run for reelection to pursue the programs and policies that have been set in place over the past few years.

I may appear presumptuous and eager, but I feel that I have the qualities and performance standards that could assist the administration and President Reagan's reelection. I would be very interested in your consideration of me for appointment to your staff and the reelection committee staff.

I am enclosing for your use an updated resume and I am sure that E. Pendleton James has data regarding my credentials in his file.

In the event that you are interested in talking with me regarding the above matters, I would be privileged to meet with you the next time you are in Santa Barbara, hopefully when you are here in early March. I can be reached at my office, telephone number 805-966-1501, or at my residence 805-9691435, or by correspondence to my office noted above.

Many thanks for your consideration of what I hope you will find a sincere and earnest interest on my part.

Very Truly Yours,
