Yuri Orlov: An Extraordinary Man

Yuri Orlov ranks along with Andrei Sakharov and Anatoliy Shcharansky among the most important human rights activists in the Soviet Union. His main contribution was to try to break the Soviet state's monopoly on information both to its own people and to the outside world.

A physicist by training, Orlov abandoned a successful, but clouded, (he had once previously been arrested for youthful dissent activities) career at an institute of the prestigious Armenian Academy of Sciences in order to inform the world and Soviet people of the USSR's violations of the Helsinki Accords.

In May 1976, he and about a dozen other Moscow intellectuals of various ethnic and religious persuasions formed the Independent Group to Monitor Soviet Compliance with the Helsinki Accords. Shcharansky was a member of this group as well as Mrs. Bonner, wife of Sakharov. The Group was bound by a common dedication to democratic principles and scrupulous regard for the truth.

The Group set itself the task of gathering precise, well documented evidence -- no easy task in the secretive, highly controlled Soviet society -- of abuses of the rights cited in the Helsinki Accords and other international agreements, such as freedom of religion, the right to leave one's country and return thereto, treatment of minorities, right to free speech, assembly, etc.

Group members interviewed hundreds of people and did extensive legal research, producing more than 30 major reports of Soviet abuses. These reports were published in the illegal underground press (called "samizdat") and smuggled out to the West. The information was then broadcast back into the USSR by Western radio stations and thus reached millions of Soviet and East European listeners who, because of Soviet secrecy and censorship, were not themselves very aware of the extent of these abuses.

The Helsinki Monitoring Group, as it became known, provided the outside world with among the most extensive and well-documented evidence of the pervasive nature of Soviet human rights abuses. It also spawned Monitoring groups and activists in many other parts of the USSR, who aim to uphold the standards set by the Group.

Orlov is an extraordinarily courageous individual. Low key, self-effacing and somewhat shy, he has stood up to his KGB jailers on many occasions -- and been severely punished for it. He tried to continue his scientific pursuits while in prison and labor camp, and to speak up about violations of Soviet law in the camps. His guards reportedly taunted him that he would leave the camp "a vegetable".

Orlov's wife Irina has also been active in dissident activities. She is barred from working in any but the most menial jobs (babysitter, housecleaner). Orlov has two children by a previous marriage.

PRESIDENTIAL RADIO TALK: PRE-SUMMIT MEETING WITH GENERAL SECRETARY GORBACHEV
SATURDAY, OCTOBER 4, 1986

My fellow Americans: I'm sure many of you have heard that a week from now in Reykjavik, Iceland, I will be meeting with the leader of the Soviet Union, General Secretary Gorbachev. Though the meeting will be relatively brief, our discussions will be of critical importance: we'll be laying the groundwork for Mr. Gorbachev's upcoming visit to the United States and the summit talks that will take place then.

Now as President, I get all sorts of briefings when talks like these are scheduled but I thought today I'd change things around a bit and give a briefing of my own to those I think are equally important participants in the summit process -- you the people.

Now I know it's true that some here in the capital think the people can't be trusted with such complex matters as foreign policy. But along with our Founding Fathers, I've always believed that the intuitive wisdom of the people is far more dependable over the long run than the temporary insights or parochial pursuits of the Washington experts. That's why I've said right from the start that the first obligation of democratic leaders is to keep the people informed and seek their support on public policy.

So today I want to take a few moments to bring you up to date on the meeting in Iceland and ask your support for our objectives there. In particular, I want to ask your help in removing a grave obstacle to our chances for progress at these talks and the others to follow. It's an obstacle created by partisan divisions here at home, so I do think it's a problem you can help me solve.

Perhaps you remember Mr. Gorbachev and I first met a year ago in Geneva. We spent about 5 hours alone; and more than 15 hours together with the rest of our delegations. Believe me, we learned again the truth of the statement: nations don't mistrust each other because they are armed; they're armed because they mistrust each other. On this point, I was very blunt and candid with Mr. Gorbachev and told him that in our view the source of that mistrust was the Soviet Union's record of seeking to impose its ideology and rule on others.

But I also made it clear that while the United States remains committed to freedom and self-determination for all the nations of the world, we also want to work with the Soviet Union to prevent war and maintain peace. We believe the twin goals of world peace and freedom can be furthered by making progress with the Soviet Union in four thorny but closely-related areas: respect for human rights, arms reductions, the resolution of regional conflicts, and expanded bilateral contacts between our nations.

And, to achieve progress on such a broad agenda, we believe personal meetings between our leaders can be very useful. First, as I said, to dispel illusions -- to make sure the Soviets avoid miscalculation, that they know where we stand. And second, the simple fact is that heads of state can frequently resolve matters far more quickly than other negotiators can.

On this point, I like to tell a story about the Geneva summit. Our experts thought the scheduling of any future meetings was a difficult, delicate subject best left to later in the discussions. Yet as we were walking together after one of our meetings, I mentioned to Mr. Gorbachev how much I would like him to visit the United States. So, I invited him; and he said, "I accept." And then he told me how much he would like me to see the Soviet Union. So he invited me. And I said: "I accept." And there it was. As simple as that.

So face-to-face talks can be helpful. And when the Soviet Foreign Minister met with me 2 weeks ago, he carried a letter from Mr. Gorbachev. Part of the letter was the suggestion that we meet in a third country like Iceland -- for preparatory talks on the upcoming summit here in the United States. I accepted.

I want you to know that next week during the talks in Iceland, we will be taking the same balanced approach we took in Geneva. On one hand, we will make it clear we seek negotiations and serious progress with the Soviets on a wide range of issues. On the other, we will make it clear that we will not sacrifice our values, principles, or vital interests for the sake of merely signing agreements. And that's just another way of making it clear to the Soviets we harbor no illusions about them or their geopolitical intentions.

This last point is important. You see, in the past, when agreements were reached with the Soviets, this led to much unrealistic talk about the great thaw in Soviet-American relations and even predictions about the end of the cold war. And then when the Soviets reverted to form -- such as the invasion of Afghanistan -- the result was shock and policy paralysis in Washington.

This now has changed. Just last month -- after a Soviet spy at the U.N. was arrested -- the Soviets retaliated by taking hostage an American journalist, Nicholas Daniloff, in Moscow. It was an act of international outrage; but this time we were prepared. Because we understood that the Soviets are relentless adversaries, they could not surprise us, nor could their actions derail our long-term commitments or initiatives. We knew what we had to do. We wanted Daniloff freed, with no deals. We had to make clear to them the consequences of their actions. We had to be direct, candid, and forceful.

And we were. That's why Nicholas Daniloff is freed and back in the United States. Later, we swapped Zakharov, the spy, for two noted Russian dissidents, Yuri and Irina Orlov. And that's why we can now go forward to Iceland. Believe me, as we proceed along the path of negotiations, there will be other such obstacles. But let me assure you: as each obstacle arises, we will again make clear to the Soviets our lack of illusions about them, and our resolve to hold them accountable for their actions.

That's the bottom line to this briefing: in order to be successful in negotiations, an American President must be perceived by the Soviets as realistic and firm and, above all, a President speaking for a united people, a united country.

In the past, this has been one of the Nation's noblest traditions. When it came to matters of national security, politics usually stopped at the water's edge, Americans stood together and the fabric of bipartisan cooperation was untearable, the bond of national unity unbreakable.

As I mentioned when I returned last year from Geneva, rarely have the expressions of public and congressional support been more gratifying than during our negotiations with the Soviets. And so today, with a new round of negotiations underway, I'm appealing again for that support.

And I'm asking the Congress to be especially alert about sending the Soviets a message of national unity.

For example, we believe our 5-1/2 year military buildup has been a principal factor in bringing the Soviets to the negotiating table. So we need continued support for defense appropriations. So too, some legislative restrictions passed by the House of Representatives could well jeopardize the chances for successful discussions with the Soviets.

The House, for example, voted to ban tests of anti-satellite systems, even though the Soviets have a system in operation and we don't. They voted to stop us from producing a credible deterrent to modern Soviet chemical weapons. They voted to substantially cut our request for the Strategic Defense Initiatives, a program that promotes a safer future and also underpins our negotiating position in Geneva and our hopes for strategic arms reductions. They voted to deny funds to move beyond certain limits of SALT II, a treaty that couldn't be ratified and that would've expired by now if it had been ratified and that the Soviets have repeatedly violated. And finally, the House has prohibited essentially the testing of all nuclear weapons, which we still need to deter war.

These national security proposals as well as other unacceptable domestic policy provisions are now included in the Government-wide appropriations bill that is being sent this way -- unless they are changed from the House passed version, believe me, it will be vetoed. But there is an even larger issue. Every single one of these issues I outlined is under discussion with the Soviets -- I cannot afford to have my hands tied in our discussions about them. Nor can we fail to have the Government's appropriations resolved for next year. The Soviets must not think that delay could work to their advantage by gaining from the Congress what they cannot win at the negotiating table.

That is why we need to send to the Soviets a consistent message of clear resolve and national unity. These upcoming negotiations are important to you, your children, to America's future. Today I'm asking your support and that of the congressional leadership. Bipartisan cooperation has been the keystone of American foreign policy and, as I've said, I'm grateful and deeply touched by the support I've received in the past from all of you.

But right now that support is needed more than ever. The Members of Congress should know that as I said at the beginning, the people are the experts in any democracy and you will hold accountable those who for the sake of partisan advantage trifle with our national security and the chances for peace and freedom.

These are hopeful developments; and that is why I think we can view this whole summit process soberly and yet with a reasonable degree of optimism.

Thank you for your support in the past and as we leave for the talks in Iceland I hope I can count on you again. Make your views known in Washington and don't forget to keep us in your prayers as well.

MEMORANDUM FOR ANTHONY R. DOLAN

FROM: RODNEY B. MCDANIEL Bob for

SUBJECT: Draft Public Statements for Reykjavik

*Free
Reykjavik*

Working with State, we have prepared draft public statements for possible use by the President during the Reykjavik visit. None of the events associated with these statements are currently firm on the President's schedule, hence the following draft statements are provided for contingency purposes:

- Draft arrival statement (Tab A)
- Draft toast for social event hosted by Iceland (Tab B)
- Draft remarks to US Forces (Tab C)
- Possible Presidential press statement at conclusion of meeting (Tab D)

Reykjavik Trip: October 9 Arrival Statement

I am very pleased to be in Iceland. Our connections go back a very long way to the days of the great Viking voyagers who made their way first to Iceland and then to America. Today, in fact, we Americans celebrate Leif Ericsson Day.

Our friendship was ^{further} cemented during World War II by the hardships and suffering we shared as Allies. The ultimate victory in Europe was due in no small part to the courage and skill of the many Icelandic seafarers who shared in the effort to keep the North Atlantic supply lines open. Iceland paid a high price for ^{our common} ~~that~~ victory and it is a sacrifice that we recall today with gratitude.

Iceland ~~was~~ one of the original NATO partners and ~~today it~~ continues to play a crucial role in the protection of the Alliance's northern flank. ~~However,~~ Iceland's role in the Alliance is not limited to its contribution to the common defense, but also extends to ^{our common} ~~the~~ search for a just peace. ^{and stable} There can be no better testimony to President Vigdis Finnbogadottir's personal commitment to this elusive goal than her willingness to host this meeting between General Secretary Gorbachev and me.

and vital sea lines of communication

At Geneva, last year, Mr. Gorbachev and I began a direct dialogue designed to narrow the differences that divide our two countries and put out relations on a more stable footing. We have made progress toward this goal and there is potential for us to make even more. So when Mr. Gorbachev suggested that we meet to prepare the way for the next summit I readily agreed.

We will discuss many things during our stay here: respect and observance of human rights; reducing nuclear arms and the risk of war, resolving regional conflicts; and broadening contacts and cooperation between our two countries. These talks will be frank and tough, but that's as it should be: the issues we're talking about -- peace and freedom -- are tough. [NEED SOME SORT OF SOUND BITE.]

We will not solve all our differences in the next two days but we can make it more likely that the coming summit in the United States will be productive.

The gracious hospitality of the government and people of Iceland will make a big contribution to this important work. We are pleased to be here and we thank you for your warm welcome.

Reykjavik Trip: Draft Toast by the President

Madam President, Mr. General Secretary, ladies and gentlemen:

I want to thank the Government of Iceland, and in particular President Finnbogadottir, for their hospitality and for the arrangements they have made on such short notice to make this meeting possible. Iceland is a country with which we have ancient ties and long-standing relations of friendship and alliance.

Some historians say it was a Norseman, Rurik, who sailed from Scandinavia ^{up} down the rivers of Russia to found the first Russian state. It was, of course, another Norseman, Leif Ericsson, the son of Eric the Red -- no political significance intended -- who left Iceland and went on to discover America, calling it Vinland. However, he had lost his way. Turned out this way in Europe and come to be called Finland.

~~It is~~ ^{as} An odd turn of fate ~~that~~ has brought you, Mr. General Secretary, and me, together in Iceland, ~~where we are~~ guests of Leif Ericsson's descendants. Here we meet geographically halfway, but on friendly ground ~~with a history~~ ~~all three nations share.~~

Rurik and Leif Ericsson, the Norsemen, were warriors. But it was their peaceful and exploratory activities that we remember them for. Hopefully this example can inspire our work this weekend.

Our nations share a common interest -- the interest of all mankind -- in preserving the world from war. As I have said before, and as we agreed at Geneva, a nuclear war cannot be won and must never be fought. But this is not enough. We must not only reduce the arms we have accumulated. We must reduce the political tensions that have led us to build those arms.

Because my country is serious about preventing war, we take an equally strong interest in human rights. Our concern for protecting human freedom has many roots, but we should never forget that in doing so we also protect and strengthen the peace. If we do not address all these issues, we will succeed at none.

To do what is necessary for the future of our world will take wisdom, strength and perseverance. It will require courage like that shown by Leif Ericsson when he crossed the Atlantic to discover America.

I propose we lift our glasses to peace and freedom, and the courage, wisdom, strength and perseverance we need to pursue these lofty goals.

Again, thank you very much President Finnbogadottir for Iceland's kind hospitality.

ELEMENTS FOR THE PRESIDENT'S DEPARTURE SPEECH
TO U.S. FORCES AT KEFLAVIK, OCTOBER 12, 1986

- Great appreciation by America and our Allies for the members of the Icelandic Defense Force who are faced with a difficult task in a very challenging environment.
- The dedication and professionalism of all members of the IDF is a source of pride and an example for U.S. ~~and~~ ^{Allied} forces everywhere.
- The men and women of the U.S. armed forces at Keflavik and other sites in Iceland are truly in the front lines of the Alliance every day. The proximity to major Soviet naval bases on the Kola Peninsula and to the sea lines of communication between the U.S. and Europe place ~~them~~ ^{you} in one of the most strategic spots in the NATO area.
- The importance of ~~their~~ ^{your difficult} task has grown in recent years as the Soviet Union continues its expansion of a blue water navy and naval air power.
- We are very pleased by the excellent level of cooperation given by Iceland in maintaining the peace that NATO has kept in Europe for 35 years.
- The contribution of Iceland and the Icelandic Defense Force cannot be overestimated. It is a crucial factor in ~~NATO's northern flank~~ ^{for the entire Alliance}.
- The IDF is an important link between the people of Iceland and of the United States. In addition to this personal contact between our citizens, I am very proud of the assistance rendered by the IDF to Iceland in such areas of search and rescue at sea.

Last pt must be more forceful

- In short, what you are doing here is crucial to the freedom of all the democracies. Keep it up. We are proud of you, and we are grateful.

MEMORANDUM FOR DONALD T. REGAN

FROM: JOHN M. POINDEXTER

SUBJECT: Request for Special Air Missions Aircraft for Secretary Shultz -- October 12-13

Immediately following the meetings in Reykjavik, Secretary Shultz will travel to Brussels to brief the NATO allies on the President's discussions with Secretary Gorbachev. As you know, Alliance solidarity is one of the keys to progress.

State has requested the use of a Special Air Missions aircraft to transport the Secretary and staff from Reykjavik to Brussels on October 12 and back to Washington on October 13. We understand informally from the White House Military Office that an aircraft is available. I recommend that you approve State's request.

~~CONFIDENTIAL~~MEMORANDUM FOR VADM JOHN M. POINDEXTER
THE WHITE HOUSE

Subject: Request for Special Air Missions Aircraft

Secretary Shultz will accompany the President to Reykjavik for the pre-Summit meetings scheduled to take place on October 11 and 12. Immediately following the final meeting, the Secretary will travel to Brussels where he will brief the NATO allies on the results of the President's discussions with the Soviet leader. The Secretary plans to arrive Brussels on the evening of October 12, remain overnight, conduct the briefings on the 13th and return to Washington.

To allow Secretary Shultz to keep this schedule, the use of a Special Air Missions aircraft is requested to transport the Secretary and accompanying staff from Reykjavik on October 12.

Thank you for your continued cooperation and support.
