THE WHITE HOUSE

WASHINGTON

MEETING WITH SELECTED DEMOCRATIC MEMBERS OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

DATE: Tuesday, April 12, 1983
LOCATION: The Cabinet Room
TIME: 1:00 P.M. (30 Minutes)
FROM: Kenneth M. Duberstein Kar D.

I. PURPOSE

To express opposition to the Zablocki (D-Wisconsin)-Markey (D-Massachusetts) freeze resolution and to encourage support for amendments consistent with Administration goals to the pending freeze resolution and the bipartisan alternative resolution.

II. BACKGROUND

The House of Representatives is scheduled to resume consideration of a nuclear freeze resolution on Wednesday, April 13.

When the House initially considered on March 16 a Foreign Affairs Committee reported resolution, which called for an immediate freeze on all nuclear weapons and was co-sponsored by 190 Members, an emotional debate ensued on the precise interpretation of the resolution language. Serious concerns were expressed by some co-sponsors of the resolution, as well as those opposed to the freeze, as to whether the language precluded a strategic modernization program. The question of continuation of production of weapons systems which have conventional as well as nuclear capabilities (e.g., the F-16) was debated but unresolved.

An amendment by Congressman Mark Siljander (R-Michigan) which could be interpreted as providing either for simultaneous freeze and reduction negotiations or an option to the Administration to pursue one or the other of the objectives, was defeated 209-215.

The House Democratic Leadership suspended debate on the freeze resolution. The pending order of business when Floor action resumes is the Levitas (D-Ga.) amendment which provides for negotiations toward a mutual build-down in strategic nuclear forces. Adoption of the amendment would kill the freeze resolution.

The current legislative strategy of the leadership opposed to the freeze is to offer four or six amendments dealing with modernization, dual purpose weapons systems, a unilateral freeze, mutual build-down, clarification of advisory nature of the reduction, and the option to pursue reductions or a freeze, all of which would, in spirit, be consistent with current arms control objectives of the Administration.

The Administration continues to support the bipartisan Broomfield (R-Michigan), Price (D-Illinois), Stratton (D-New York), et. al., resolution, which calls for a freeze at equal and substantially reduced levels, though it has little chance of House passage.

The question of the Administration's commitment to successful arms control negotiations, which was raised in the freeze debate on the 16th, has been answered again affirmatively on March 31 in the President's new proposal relating to intermediate nuclear forces.

The Members attending this meeting are Democrats who by and large support the Committee's reported resolution, but voted in support of the Siljander amendment. Others either voted against Siljander but because of expressed concerns on such issues as modernization and dual purpose systems are considered swing votes or are opposed outright to a freeze.

Talking Points

-- Thank you for joining us to discuss the nuclear arms resolutions before the House. Your votes will be key to the outcome.

-- We share the concerns that motivate a nuclear freeze. But, however well intentioned, a freeze at current levels, as called for in the Zablocki Resolution, would do more harm than good. First and foremost, it would send precisely the wrong signal to the Soviets, who by their own account are neither unilateralists nor philanthropists. How can we expect to make further progress toward arms reductions, if the Soviets have no incentive to reduce?

-- We can do better than a freeze. In the talks in Geneva, my Administration has proposed a fifty percent cut in strategic missiles and the elimination of an entire class of intermediate missiles. It would be best to have none, than some of these intermediate missiles. But, as I recently announced, if there must be some, it is better to have few than to have many.

-- Our resolve has produced some progress, and I am determined to achieve more. It is conventional wisdom that it was NATO's intermediate missile deployment plan that brought the Soviets to the INF negotiating table. In START, the Soviets have already gone further in discussing reductions than they have in any prior negotiations.

-- In short, a freeze would remove Soviet incentives to agree to reductions and be virtually impossible to verify. Although the freeze supporters disagreed among themselves, during the House debate in March, over what is to be frozen, a freeze risks undercutting our long overdue modernization program.

-- We therefore oppose any freeze-first resolution and support the bipartisan Broomfield-Price-Stratton resolution, which expresses support for the ongoing nuclear arms reductions negotiations in Geneva, followed by a freeze at equal and substantially reduced levels.

-- We hope this resolution will receive wide bipartisan support as did a similar resolution, which passed the House last summer.

-- I also urge you to support amendments dealing with the issues of modernization and dual-purpose weapons systems--those that have conventional and nuclear capabilities--and any other amendments that correct the major flaws in the Zablocki resolution.

-- Please convey to your colleagues my determination and personal commitment toward substantial, verifiable, equitable, and militarily significant reductions. A freeze-first resolution simply sends the wrong message to our friends and foes.

-- I would like to ask George Shultz and Cap to say a few words about the impact of a freeze from their perspective.

BRIEFING PAPER FOR THE PRESIDENT

MEETING: CABINET AFFAIRS BRIEFING ON THE
FCC SYNDICATION RULE
DATE: APRIL 12, 1983
TIME: 2 P.M. (45 MINUTES)
LOCATION: OVAL OFFICE
FROM: CRAIG L. FULLER

I. PURPOSE

This meeting has been scheduled to allow the Department of Commerce and the Department of Justice to brief you with regard to the proposed repeal of the network syndication rule by the Federal Communications Commission. This meeting is a briefing only and should not result in a decision. If you wish to pursue the matter further, a meeting of the Cabinet Council on Commerce and Trade will be scheduled.

II. BACKGROUND

A background memo has been prepared by the Office of Policy Development and you will find it attached. The memo has been designed to outline the history of limitations placed on network syndication as well as the pro and con arguments being made in the current debate.

Procedurally you should be aware of the following:

- the Departments of Commerce and Justice have had the FCC Syndication Rule under review for several months;
- both departments favor repeal of the rule and filed a statement to that effect with the FCC several weeks ago;
- when it was learned that the Regulatory Relief Task Force was about to file a similar letter with the FCC, supporting repeal of the Rule, we asked that the matter be reviewed before any further action was taken;

- the Cabinet Council on Commerce and Trade has heard this issue once in a working session and no one argued that the Administration should do anything other than support repeal;
- the FCC is now at a point in their review of the Syndication Rule that allows organizations which originally filed comments to reply to comments filed by other organizations (this will be referred to in the meeting as the "Reply Period" which ends on April 26th).

This meeting is small and the participants have been advised to discuss both sides of the issue with us and answer questions. I should point out that procedurally we are in the position of having both Commerce and Justice on the record favoring repeal of the FCC Syndication Rule and the White House now raising questions about the wisdom of such a position. Both Commerce and Justice are considering filing a "Reply" with the FCC; however, all action is on hold until after this meeting and, if necessary, a Cabinet Council meeting.

As you go into this briefing, I believe that you have the following options:

- a) status quo--let Commerce and Justice maintain the positions already presented to the FCC and file an additional statement during the "Reply Period."
- b) no change in Administration position/review "Reply Filings"--if, after the briefing, you determine that there is no need to change the position the Administration has already taken based upon the initial filings of Justice and Commerce, we might be able to address in the "Reply Filing" the concerns you may have about actions by the networks which could cause harm to the producers, actors and independent television stations if the networks were to operate without the Syndication Rule in existence. This is something that Justice and Commerce would have to consider and report back on.
- c) reconsider the administration's position--if, after the briefing, you wish to consider altering the Administration's position we should schedule a meeting of the Cabinet Council on Commerce and Trade.

V. SEQUENCE

Secretary Baldrige and Bill Baxter will be able to discuss the views of Commerce and Justice respectively.

A BRIEF HISTORY OF
FCC SYNDICATION AND FINANCIAL INTEREST RULES

At least since the mid-1950's, the Federal Communication Commission (FCC) has been concerned with alleged network dominance of television. The FCC issued reports on the problem in 1957, 1962, and 1965. In 1970, the FCC adopted its Syndication and Financial Interest Rule prohibiting the three major television networks (ABC, CBS, and NBC) from engaging in television program syndication and/or acquiring any financial interest in television programs produced by another entity. (They are prohibited from producing programs from broadcast in which they are not the sole owner.)

The Department of Justice conducted several investigations of network practices beginning in 1956. An investigation initiated in 1967 led to the filing of a lawsuit in 1972 against the three networks, charging violations of the Sherman Act. The suits were dismissed without prejudice on procedural grounds, but refiled in late 1974, charging that:

- o ownership and control of prime time programming was concentrated among the networks;
- o the networks unreasonably restrained competition in the production, distribution, and sale of entertainment programming;
- o program supply to the networks was unreasonably restrained; and
- o the public had been deprived of the benefits of free and open competition in the broadcast of television entertainment programming.

In late 1976, NBC and the Department of Justice filed a stipulation providing for the entry of a consent decree to settle the litigation. A little more than one year later, a modified version of the proposed consent decree was entered by the district court. Slightly more than two years after that, in mid-1980, first CBS, then ABC followed by entering into similar consent decrees with the Department of Justice.

The consent decrees incorporate the major provisions of the Commission's Syndication and Financial Interest Rules. In addition, the consent decrees provide for further limitations on network program acquisition activities not addressed by the Commission's Rule. Thus, with very detailed provisions, the decrees govern and limit the timing and terms of network-program supplier agreements concerning program production, distribution, options, and exclusivity. For example, the ABC consent decree limits to four years the length of time the network can initially negotiate for exclusivity to keep a program out of daily (stripped) syndication. Thus, in all significant respects, the requirements of the consent decrees are more restrictive than or equivalent to the restrictions of the syndication and financial interest rule.

In January 1977, the FCC issued a Notice of Inquiry which sought information concerning the effects of its rules and whether OR NOT less regulation was called for. The Commission empaneled a special staff which presented its conclusions and recommendations to the Commission in the fall of 1980. Without adopting or rejecting them, the Commission terminated the inquiry.

The Network Inquiry Special Staff concluded that the Rule was "misguided at best" and had "done little to further the Commission's goals of diversity or increased competition in the program supply market". The report stated that the Rule failed to increase competition in the syndication market because the market was competitively structured prior to its imposition.

Specifically, the Network Inquiry Special Staff concluded:

- o the program supply market for prime time television was not concentrated prior to the Rule;
- o the program supply market is competitively structured today;
- o the syndication market was competitive prior to the Rule; (4) the syndication market remains competitive today;
- o the Rule has resulted in inefficient risksharing by prohibiting network participation; and (6) the Rule may have the unintended effect of handicapping the networks' ability to compete with new technologies.

In July 1982, the FCC issued a Notice of Proposed Rule Making to review the impact of this Rule in light of changes in market conditions and evaluation the conclusion and recommendations made by the Network Inquiry Special Staff.

On January 26, 1983, the Department of Commerce and the Department of Justice filed responses to the FCC's Notice, recommending that the Rules be rescinded. The essence of Justice's arguments was as follows:

The original justifications of the Rules as means of promoting competition and diversity in the program production market are unfounded. The Rules do not promote, and to some degree may retard competition in production, and in no way reduce whatever market power the networks may have as buyers of programs.

The Department based its conclusion on two facts: The program supply market appears to be competitive, and the Rule do not change the relative bargaining positions of the suppliers and the networks. Further, the Rules create potential inefficiencies in the production market. On the other hand, the Department was able to indentify a possible danger to the syndication market from total repeal of the present Rule.

Among the Rule's supporters (i.e., opposing repeal) are the Committee for Prudent Deregulation; the Association of Independent Television Stations, Inc.; the Association of National Advertisers; the Motion Picture Association of America; Viacom International, Inc.; Turner Broadcasting System, Inc.; the Office of Communications of the United Church of Christ and Taft Broadcasting Co. and the Association of National Advertisers.

FCC SYNDICATION AND FINANCIAL INTEREST RULES

Arguments Against Repeal

- o Studios argue that if the networks are permitted to obtain a financial interest in programming and re-enter the off-network syndication business, producers will be at a critical disadvantage in bargaining and negotiating with the networks. The producers would be unable to resist network demands for financial participation and syndication rights. What about competition price?
- o Independent distributors argue that if the networks are able to obtain syndication rights at the time of first-run negotiations, independent distributors will not have a chance to bid on such rights. Therefore, the syndication business would become more concentrated.
- o Repeal would limit diversity of programming sources by weakening or eliminating television program producers.
- o Repeal would weaken independent television stations by limiting their access to desirable off-network programs.
- o Repeal would increase television advertising costs by making independent television stations less suitable advertising vehicles.
- o If networks use anticompetitive market practices, independent TV stations may be denied access to some programming.

Arguments For Repeal

- o Repeal would bring new investment into the programming business, thereby offering independent producers another source of financing for their programs.
- o Repeal would eliminate the current artificial market allocation scheme.
- o Repeal would eliminate the use of regulatory agencies as surrogates for the Justice Department in dealing with possible anticompetitive problems.
- o Repeal would offer the independent producers new potential buyers of their programs, by offering independent competing options to syndication.
- o Repeal would permit competition in program distribution by allowing three additional entities, i.e., the networks, to compete for the business.
- o Repeal would permit the major TV networks to compete more effectively with new technologies, e.g., direct broadcast satellite and pay TV, for program rights.

- o To the extent that protection against anticompetitive behavior and undue market power is required, sufficient remedies rest with the Department of Justice and private antitrust litigants under existing law.
- o Since the networks are willing to assume the primary financial risk for developing new television series they should be permitted to share in continuing profits.

Point - Counterpoint

- o Point: The arguments against repeal assume that the three networks will collude to form an undetected cartel to coordinate their syndication activities.

Counterpoint: Given the highly competitive nature of the television programming and syndication businesses, such coordinated action, or its potential success, is highly improbable. Not only would the networks have to avoid Justice Department detection and enforcement, they would have to avoid detection by potential private litigants. The latter problem would be particularly acute since the television distribution industry is extremely fluid with personnel moving among firms and industry segments many times during a career.

- o Point: The networks would not have to act collusively -- only in parallel. They would withhold quality programs from independent stations, favoring instead their affiliates.

Counterpoint: This assumption fails to recognize the significant incentives to enter the syndication business, especially if there is a shortage of off-network syndicated series.

- o Point: A possible compromise rule might protect the syndication market without interfering in the production market. For example, the networks might be required to auction syndication rights to the highest bidder within a short time after the end of a program's network run. Such a compromise would permit the networks to receive the full return on their investment but would still bar anticompetitive activity.

MEETING WITH FINANCIAL LEADERS WHO PUBLICLY ARE OPPOSING WITHHOLDING PROVISIONS

DATE: April 12, 1983

LOCATION: Cabinet Room

TIME: 4:00 - 4:45 pm

FROM: FAITH RYAN WHITTLESEY FRW

I. PURPOSE

To blunt opposition to withholding by banks and financial institutions of 10% of interest and dividend payments.

II. BACKGROUND

Congressional efforts have quickened with respect to repealing the withholding provision imposed upon banks and financial institutions with respect to dividend and interest payments. These provisions are scheduled to go into effect on July 1, 1983 and require banks and other financial institutions to collect 10% of the gross amount of dividends and interest.

Organized opposition comes from approximately 7 large financial associations and the U.S. Chamber of Commerce. Direct confrontation with you and senior Administration officials is deemed to be the most effective means of countering this active repeal effort.

Congressional action on this repeal legislation is expected on Friday, April 15, 1983.
