THE WHITE HOUSE

Office of the Press Secretary

For Immediate Release

October 28, 1981

STATEMENT BY THE PRESIDENT

I want to express my gratitude to the members of the United States Senate for their approval of the sale of the AWACS defense system to Saudi Arabia.

Today we have seen the upper chamber at its best. The United States Senate has acted with statesmanship, with foresight, and with courage.

I cannot fully express my gratitude to Senator Baker and the other Senate leaders, Democrats as well as Republicans, who played such a crucial role in this decision.

Today's action by the Senate will not only strengthen Saudi-American relations but will also protect our economic lifeline to the Middle East, win favor among moderate Arab nations and -- most important -- continue the difficult but steady progress toward peace and stability in the Middle East.

We have acted in concert to demonstrate that the United States is indeed a reliable security partner. Our friends should realize that steadfastness of purpose is a hallmark of American foreign policy, while those who would create instability in this region should note that the forces of moderation have our unequivocal support in deterring aggression.

This vote alone does not mean that our security problems in that part of the world have been completely solved. This package is but a part of our overall regional security strategy.

Our strategy seeks to enhance the capacity of friendly states to defend themselves and to improve our own ability to project our own forces into the region should deterrence fail. We will continue to pursue efforts in both areas.

Our support for the security of Israel is of course undiminished by today's vote. The United States will maintain its unshakable commitment to the security and welfare of the State of Israel, recognizing that a strong Israel is essential to our basic goals in that area.

Much work still remains ahead. I trust that all of us who disagreed openly and vigorously in recent days can now put aside our honest differences and work together for common goals: friendship, security, and peace at last in the cradle of our civilization.

Because of actions like today's by the Senate, the cause of peace is again on the march in the Middle East. For this, all of us can be grateful.

Conservatives, Corporations Aided AWACS

By Thomas B. Edsall Washington Post Staff Writer

Submerged in the drama of President Reagan's successful drive to win Senate approval of the $8.5 billion aircraft sale to Saudi Arabia was a highly effective lobbying effort by conservative groups, key elements of the oil and aerospace industries and an ad hoc collection of corporations that do business with Arab countries.

Many of these interests were major supporters of the election campaigns of freshman Republicans and have facilities in the states of southern senators who abandoned their opposition or indecision in the final days before the vote Wednesday and put the sale over the top, 52 to 48.

From this perspective, just one aspect of the complex tale of President Reagan's first foreign policy victory in Congress, it was a test of strength between the Israeli lobby and core elements of the Reagan coalition, and the Israeli lobby was the clear loser.

The lobbying drive in behalf of the arms deal, which includes selling the Saudis Airborne Warning and Control System (AWACS) radar planes, became a concerted effort about a month before the vote—at a time when prospects for a Reagan victory were dim.

On the business side, the initiative was taken by Richard M. Hunt, director of government relations for NL Industries, a major manufacturer of petroleum equipment and supplies. He put together a group of Washington representatives from about 40 companies with Mideast ties to form an ad hoc AWACS coalition from about 40 companies with Mideast ties to form an ad hoc AWACS coalition.

"We believed in it," Hunt declared. Among the corporations were Boeing Co. and Pratt & Whitney division of United Technologies Corp., both of which had a direct financial stake in the sale as prime contractor and engine builder, respectively. The coalition also included such major oil companies as Exxon and Mobil, and two international construction firms, Brown & Root and Bechtel, both of which do extensive work in the Middle East.

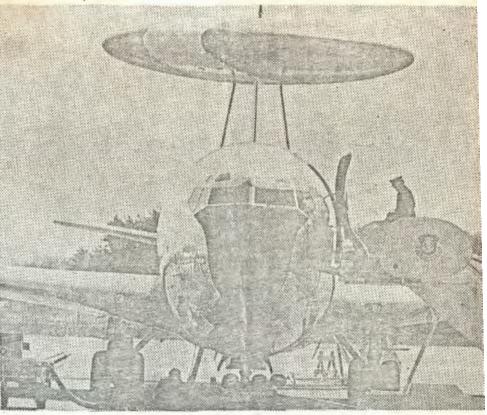

Many of the firms are members of the Business Roundtable, perhaps the most influential business lobbying group in Washington, and some of the meetings were held in the Roundtable's Washington offices. The Roundtable, an organization of major U.S. corporations, never took a formal stand on the sale.

Working in parallel and sometimes in cooperation with the business alliance was a lobbying effort coordinated by Richard Sellers, director of congressional relations for the American Security Council and Washington director for the Coalition for Peace Through Strength.

He put together the leaders of 34 diverse

He put together the leaders of 34 diverse groups such as the Young Americans for Freedom, American Military Retirees Association, Catholics for Christian Political Action, Conservative Victory Fund, National Christian Action Committee and Veterans of Foreign Wars.

Reagan's election coalition overpowered Israeli lobby in Senate vote on selling radar planes like th

Similarly, the Stanton Group, part of the network of conservative organizations run by Paul Weyrich, the best known of which is the Committee for the Survival of a Free Congress, pressed for the sale among its sympathizers, particularly junior Republicans who have strong ties to the right wing.

These varying corporate and ideological interests have become increasingly potent. They were important not only in the election of Reagan, but also in the growth of conservatism as a political force and in the election of Republican senators with deep commitments to the political right.

In private, some of the leaders of these groups claim at least partial credit for the AWACS conversion of such senators as William Armstrong (R-Colo.), Roger Jepsen (R-Iowa) and Charles Grassley (R-Iowa).

While giving credit for the overall victory to President Reagan, Sellers argued that, when changes by three senators could have brought defeat, conservative senators held "the key to victory, period."

The Sellers group provided briefings on the sale, and also used such tactics as organizing four planeloads of Alabama businessmen to come to Washington to lobby Sen. Howell Heflin (D-Ala.) and persuading campaign supporters and contributors to back the sale. (In the case of Heflin, the effort proved futile.)

The business groups lobbied senators directly and also pressured their subcontractors, vendors and suppliers to join in.

Brown & Root, for instance, supplied position papers to senators, particularly to those from the band of southern and southwestern states—Texas, Oklahoma, Louisiana, Alabama, Mississippi and Arkansas—where Brown & Root and affiliated companies have facilities.

Arkansas—where Brown & Root and affiliated companies have facilities.

The presidents of both the Boeing commercial aircraft division and Pratt & Whitney sent telegrams by the hundreds.

Boeing president E. H. Boullioun, in wires to 1,600 firms that do business with the Washington state aircraft producer, said: "Without this sale, and with present budget planning, the AWACS production line will be ended. It is our belief that a negative decision on this issue may affect Saudi Arabia's attitude towards other U.S. products such as commercial aircraft."

In a similar telegram, Harry J. Gray, head of Pratt & Whitney, wrote: "I strongly support the sale to Saudi Arabia... A Senate veto of the president's plan would only cause the Saudis to turn to other [aircraft producers]. This would cost the U.S. both exports and jobs."

How White House won Jepsen's AWACS vote

WASHINGTON, D.C. -Shortly after Senator Roger Jepsen of lowa told the Washington press corps he had changed his mind and would support the sale of AWACS planes to Arabia, Sandi stunned reporters made up a sardonic loke:

"What did Jepsen get in exchange for AWACS?" the joke

A STATE OF

"They've promised him the MX for Iowa," was the answer.

The joke, published in Wednesday's Washington Post, was based on the premise - widely accepted by reporters and politicians Jepsen was promised something in return for his support of the AWACS sale, even if it was a missile nobody else wanted

But they were wrong.

Jepsen received no political favors. What he got, interviews with various sources indicate, was a tough leason in Renald Reagan's ability to play hardball politics.

"We just beat his brains out," said a White House official who was directly involved in the AWACS effort. "That's all. We just took Jepsen and beat his enough. Jepsen noted that his opposition to the AWACS deal had only been underscored by his recent meeting with Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin.

When Jepsen came across White House political operative Lyn Nofsiger, however, 10 was met with a no-nonsense demand. Jepsen was told Reagan had to win the AWACS test and Jepseh's vote was needed.

Jepsen pleaded that he was among Reagan's most loyal followers in the Senate - a statement he repeated later to reporters on the White House and said he could not be expected to vote with the administration on every issue.

"Turned Faucet Off"

We just turned the faucet off." said the White House official. Jepsen was told he could vote as he wished, but he could expect no further cooper ation from the White House, political or otherwise. Then he was shown the door and told he was on his own.

'We stood him up in front of an open grave and said he could jump in if he wanted to," said the official.

On the White House lawn, reporters noticed that Jepsen's visit to the White House had lasted considerably longer than expected. Jepsen explained that he and Reagan had spent a lot of time talking about Iowa Jepsen acknowledged that White, House pressure on him had been intense. At one point he made a small joke about whether the chair he sat in had been "wired." But he continued his steadfast opposition to the AWACS sale. "I'm going to vote against it, period," he said.

Machine Was Working

Inside the White House, political machine was working. Calls were going out to Iowa, and they, in turn, would generate calls and letters back to Jepsen.

The tone of those calls and letters was tough. Jepsen was told he was sent to Washington as a conservative Republican who was expected to support his conservative Republican president.

There was another, more disturbing, undercurrent in the lobbying.

"Jepsen was being accused of having sold out to the Jewish interests. There were a lot of calls of that flavor," said one well-placed Iowa political source.

With White House knowledge, lowans were taking note of the fact that Jepsen's anti-AWACS stand had been strongly influenced by two people — his wife, Dee, a fundamentalist Christian with pro-Israeli feelings, and Des Moines lawyer Harlan "Bud" Hockenberg, an early Jepsen supporter and staunch opponent of the AWACS sale.

The callers were telling him, 'I don't care if your wife is a Christian and your best friend is an Israeli, you'd better support the president,' said the White House source.

Hockenberg, asked for his reaction to Jepsen's switch on AWACS, said Wednesday, "I have no comment on the decision of Senator Japann or Senator Grassley or any action that they have taken." He added that the AWACS sale, "in my view, is one of the most serious raistakes in American foreign policy since World War II.

The White House aide estimated about 200 people contacted Jepsen because of White House influence.

Surprise Expressed

Several Iowa Republicans have expressed surprise, bordering on awe, at the support generated for AWACS by the administration's political machine.

Representative Thomas Tauke, the only lowa congressman to support the AWACS sale when the House voted on it, said groups of businessmen he talked to in his district were supporting AWACS 25-to-1. Senator Charles Grassley said 90 percent of Republican Party regulars were backing the AWACS sale.

Wythe Willey, an alde to Grassle said substantial support for the AWACS sale also came from the defense-related industries around Codar Rapids, and from farm co-ops, which depend on Saudi Arabia for a substantial portion of their petroleum.

While the calls and letters poured in, something else was happening: Iowa's junior senator, Grassley, was slowly making up his mind to support the AWACS sale.

Grassley had been mulling the proand come for weeks, mostly on his own. When he received a White House call last Wednesday, apologizing for an administration lobbyist's attempt to limk his AWACS vote with White House action on the nomination of Evan Hultman as U.S. attorney in northern Iowa, Grassley began seriously listening to the White House

There were many substantive considerations, Grassley said, and there was a big political one.

"I saw that the overwhelming number of Democrats were opposed to it. I thought, if they were trying to embarrase the president then that would weigh in my thinking."

Grassley said he "had a feeling" he won't explain why — that Jepsen was reconsidering his position on AWACS. By Jepsen's own accounting, he was reconsidering his position by the end of the week. He said he spent the weekend talking and praying about AWACS with his wife.

On Monday, Grassley talked with Jepsen several times and indicated he was leaning in favor of the sale. He also thought "it was key that both lows senators vote the same way."

Didn't Think About It

Gransley can't explain why he felt that way exactly. "Most of the time I don't even think about it, but in this case it was just something I felt."

Others in Iowa political circles are more blunt. "It put Roger in a hell of a position," said one Iowa Republican. "If Grassley hid voted for it and Jepsen against, Grassley would have become the senior senator from Iowa."

The switch to "senior" status would have been only in White House eyes, but that would have been enough. Grassley would have been given the patronage and ceremonial plums that go with being the leader of the delegation.

Said another Republican: "Jepsen was really out in the corn if Grassley went the other way."

Grassley and Jegeon met Monday night to discuss the lesse.

As it happened, Japon earlier had planned to be in New York City Monday night, attending a $1,000-perperson fund-raising reception in his behalf. But Jepsen decided to cancel his appearance there.

Jepsen's office had said the event was organized to help acquaint him with New York City's financial community. His staff strongly denied that the event was an attempt to tap financial contributors who were opponents of the AWACS sale.

Tom Wasinger, Jepsen's administrative assistant, said the fund-raiser was canceled because of "votes in the Senate." There were two votes in the Senate Monday, the last one about 6:30 p.m.

The Des Moines Register, which had not been informed of the cancellation, incorrectly reported Wednesday that Jepsen attended the event. Jepsen and Wasinger heatedly protested.

Wasinger said the report was designed "to make it look like he wasn't doing his job." Wasinger said he could not say whether the event's organizers had already received $1,000 contributions from people planning to attend, or what would be done with such money.

Jepsen, in a telephone call to a Register editor Wednesday, said he decided to cancel the affair last Friday morning, the day after The Register published an article on the planned fund raiser.

Jepsen said his decision was a result of the heated controversy over the pending AWACS vote. He said he told his staff that, "There is no way I can have this within 24 hours before the vote."

When a staff member asked whether he should inform The Register that the fund-raiser was being called off, Jepsen said he told the aide not to tell the newspaper, because he believed the reasons for the cancellation would not be reported fairly.

Jepsen said he feared that his participation in a fund-raiser in New York shortly before the AWACS vote might be "distorted or misunderstood" and appear to be an "impropriety." He also said he believed his reason for canceling the affair might be distorted, so he directed the staff to say nothing about the change of plans.

On Monday night, Grassley said, "We decided the best thing for both of us was to vote for it."

The senators planned a joint press conference Tuesday afternoon to announce their position. However, Grassley still had a scheduled meeting with Reagan at 1 p.m. Tuesday and said he could not be absolutely certain of his position until after that meeting.

On Tuesday morning, Grassley was still talking to Iowa Republicans, asking their opinions on AWACS. Jepsen and his staff were beginning to make calls to his friends in Iowa, telling them of what was about to happen.

Grassley's meeting with Roagan went as planned, and Grassley returned to the Capitol.

At 2:30, in the press gallery behind the Senate chamber, Jepsen and Grassley walked in and faced the largest crowd of reporters of their political careers.

Jepsen, looking grim, began: "I have long been on record as an opponent of the AWACS sale...."

A Stalwart's Lament

By William Safire

WASHINGTON, Oct. 14 — I am a staunch supporter of Ronald Reagan's foreign posture. Although "foreign policy" has not yet been articulated, the Reagan foreign posture is unmistakable: a tough-minded approach to the Soviet Union on arms reduction and its sponsorship of terrorism, a rejection of third-world demands for psychological and material coddling, and the projection of the impression that the U.S. is again a reliable ally.

12 Com

At the same time, I oppose the Reagan Administration's decision to abrogate past assurances to the Senate and to sell Saudi Arabia equipment that would enable its F-15's to bomb Israel, combined with its proposal to sell our most supersecret command and control equipment to a feudal regime in danger of an internal revolt, which could lead to a Soviet advantage in reading American defenses.

Those contrary views — generally for, specifically against — leave my head in a state that Prof. Leon Festinger once described as "cognitive dissonance," with the zigging part of my brain yelling at the zagging part to get in line to restore consonance and consistency. Many other loyal Republicans, conservatives and longtime hawks are going through the same internal tug-of-war.

Our problem is worsened at the sight of Tip O'Neill gleefully using the Awacs vote to resuscitate his party and strike at Ronald Reagan.

Worse still for our morale is the spectacle of Walter Mondale, who as Jimmy Carter's Vice President twisted Sen. Muriel Humphrey's arm until she voted for the sale of F-15's to the Saudis, now posing as a great defender of Israel by denouncing Mr. Reagan for following Mr. Carter's custom of acceding to Arab wish lists.

President Reagan has not made it easy for us, either, by insisting that a vote against him on Awacs would damage the foreign posture of strength and determination that we applaud. In such a bind, what is a stalwart to do?

We do not strengthen our Presidents, or help along their ability to conduct foreign policy, by acquiescing in blunders. The Awacs sale is not a test of strength between President and Congress, nor a partisan fight between Democratic doves and Republican hawks, but a test of wisdom that supporters of Ronald Reagan must not let him flunk.

As we now know, the combined Awacs and F-15 enhancement deal had its genesis in an unauthorized sales pitch by some of our least competent generals; it was secretly advanced by the Carter men as, their farewell thumb-in-the-eye to Israel; it was quickly misinterpreted as a "national commitment" by Alexander Haig, who then sought to conceal the Awacs sale from the Senate and the U.S. press and Israeli Government while the F-15 enhancement deal was going through. Not until Defense Secretary Weinberger insisted that the complete U.S.-Saudi package be revealed did the world learn the extent of the secret promises made to a country that has been sabotaging the Camp David accords.

Must those of us who believe in the Reagan foreign posture permit this momentum to take him over the cliff? Henry Kissinger, in wrestling with this problem, deplored the way the proposed F-15 enhancement "casts doubt on the American word" to our Israeli ally, and doubted whether the subtle Saudis needed Awacs support "in such an ostentatious manner." But even so, he set these merits aside on follow-the-leader grounds: "the Congress must not undermine the President's authority in international affairs."

No: "our President, right or wrong" just will not fly anymore. No secret agreement can become a "national commitment" without the nation's knowledge and Congress's concurrence, and no strong President would try to wheedle such concurrence by pleading that rejection will make him look bad.

The way for Mr. Reagan not to look bad is not to let his advisers get him into such a mess; one sure way to look bad is to force longtime supporters into bed with strange bedfellows. Dimwitted diplomacy has pushed the nation into this choice between insulting an oil resource and endangering an ally, and the Reagan men add insult to injury by accusing principled supporters of causing the problem.

As a former Presidential aide, I recall all too well the temptation to quiet the voices of friends warning of danger with a blast about "weakening the Presidency." But it is the demand to close ranks regardless of conscience that weakens the Presidency.

Along with others who were outspoken Reagan enthusiasts as far back as the 1976 primaries, I resent and reject insinuations of ideological inconsistency from men who were then reviling Ronald Reagan as a lightweight demagogue, and who now call into question our basic political loyalties from seats of the mighty in the White House and State Department.

It is the Johnnies-come-lately who are failing Ronald Reagan and weak-ening his Presidency, not the men and women who are trying with some pain to remind him what he stood for.

AWACS

WASHINGTON

December 22, 1981

Dear Mr. Evans:

Thanks for your thoughtful letter and the interesting question you raised about the AWACS decision. It appears that you have studied this matter deeply, more deeply than I.

Ours is not a policy office. We assist communications. If there is unclassified further data, I suggest you may get it by direct communication with staff at the N.S.C., or the Department of State of the Department of Defense.

Sincerely,

Morton C. Blackwell

Mr. Morton C. Blackwell Special Assistant to the President The White House Washington, D.C. 20500

Dear Mr. Blackwell:

I want to thank you for your very excellent talk at the National Round-table Convention, and also thank you for the opportunity of being part of the AWACS briefing. As I am sure you were aware, there were some areas that I did not clearly understand, and still don't. Nevertheless, I did everything to support the President. I, and many of those on my board, worked very hard and will continue to do so to support the President.

As an advisor to the Roundtable and many other conservative organizations in behalf of the Middle East, I would like to make a personal suggestion. If the President comes to the National Religious Broadcasters' Convention to speak, I would submit that he consider making a very strong statement in his message in behalf of Israel.

Mr. Blackwell, the point I was trying to get across in our conversation was that on this very significant foreign policy decision having to do with AWACS, I was totally convinced that the President certainly had considered all the facts and was making a very wise decision. Unfortunately, neither I, nor anyone else in the area of leadership in the evangelical movement to my knowledge, knew what those facts were.

Looking at the decision, based upon its face value, it did not seem to be a wise one. But, I am certain the President had a lot of other considerations that we were not aware of, such as:

- 1. Possibly, there were some very significant NATO ramifications?
- 2. That the President had made some very strong commitments to Israel that no one knew about?
- 3. There may have been some strong budgetary considerations affecting that decision?
- 4. It may have been a decision to encourage Israel to get on with the program and, as we say in Texas, fish or cut bait?

Morton C. Blackwell December 14, 1981 Page Two

I realize that we who are strong supporters of the President cannot always expect specific answers, but when we get questions flying in our face, such as --

The Saudi military is small, numbering less than 60,000, and could not protect Mecca from the revolutionary attempt in the past, how in the world would it protect 60% of the oil of the western world?

What is going to keep an insane Moslem like Khomeni from not attacking a Moslem country like Saudi Arabia?

How in the world can we defend our AWACS planes when Khomeni's F-16's flying at mock 2.2 1600 miles an hour can pop an AWAC out of the sky in seven minutes from the moment of interception?

With Israel's inflation at 165 and their GNP for defense at 41% and they already have an $18 billion debt to the U.S., what are we doing accelerating an arms race, precipitating greater economic crisis to Israel, or are we planning on additional assistance to this country to stabilize the situation?

Is Saudi Arabia willing to change any of its policies? In the past they have refused our proposals to conduct joint military maneuvers of our rapid deployment forces. They financed the PLO. They blacklisted Sadat.

We all remember when Henry Kissinger implemented his Teheran-Riyadh-Cairo axis, and we are all very keenly aware of the state of events in Teheran and Cairo at this present time, and are literally terrified at the thought of the United States not having the ability to protect our national interests in the Persian Gulf.

Mr. Blackwell, you are in my prayers. I know you have enormous responsibilities. I trust that I, and many other evangelicals in leadership, can do our very best to encourage those in our sphere of influence to pull together.

With sincere admiration and respect,

Michael Evans
