Dear Rita:

I wanted to express my congratulations to you and all those that made yesterday's White House seminar on religious rights in the Soviet Union a success.

Contrary to the severely misquoted statements which appeared in today's Washington Times, attributed to me, I feel the White House conference was constructive and an important occasion to bring together all those who are working for increased religious liberty in the Soviet Union.

With respect to the Cardinal, I would like to thank you for your efforts in making his trip enjoyable and one which he was very pleased with.

Ukrainian hierarchs meet with Reagan President rebuffs Ukrainian cardinal on Soviet visit

by Maria Rudensky
Special to The Ukrainian Weekly

WASHINGTON — Responding to a personal appeal from Cardinal Myroslav Ivan Lubachivsky, President Ronald Reagan promised on May 3 to demand religious liberty for Ukrainian Catholic and Ukrainian Orthodox believers when he is in the Soviet Union on May 29-June 2 for the summit.

Cardinal Lubachivsky met privately with the president in the Oval Office after a seminar on religious rights in the Soviet Union held in the White House East Room.

But the president rejected the prelate's request, echoed by two Russian Orthodox churchmen, to refrain from visiting Moscow's Danilov Monastery during the summit. He told Cardinal Lubachivsky he has agreed to go and cannot change the arrangement, and he will make a stand on behalf of religious freedom.

The monastery, a set of 700-year-old buildings rebuilt at Soviet government expense, "only five years ago housed a prison for children" said Father Vladimir Shibaef, identified as a priest of the Russian Orthodox Church abroad, who spoke at the White House seminar. The monastery was also described as "a Potemkin village shown to every foreign dignitary."

The president's decision was viewed with dismay by some in the Ukrainian community, especially in light of his signing, on May 2, of the congressional resolution discouraging official participation in Millennial events as long as Ukrainian churches remain banned.

At the seminar, attended by more than 150 religious and ethnic community activists including more than a dozen Ukrainians, Cardinal Lubachivsky, leader of the Ukrainian Catholic

240 prominent Americans appeal for religious rights in USSR

WASHINGTON — A group of more than 240 prominent Americans representing a broad range of religious and political opinion on April 27 appealed for religious freedom in the Soviet Union on the occasion of the Millennium of Christianity in Kievan Rus'.

The appeal was financed by the James Madison Foundation, a private research group that describes itself as an organization for world peace and against communism.

The appeal urged President Ronald Reagan to raise the issue of religious rights during his summit meeting with General Secretary Mikhail Gorbachev of the USSR.

For the full text of the appeal for religious freedom in the USSR, see page 3.

The appeal states that "human rights issues, and paramount among them the fundamental human rights of religious freedom or freedom of conscience, are not peripheral matters on the U.S.-Soviet agenda."

Among other things, the appeal called for the legalization of the Ukrainian Catholic Church and the Ukrainian Autocephalous Orthodox Church that were banned by the Stalin regime.

The appeal was presented to President Reagan on April 25 during a meeting in the Oval Office.

Meeting with the president were: the Rev. Leonid Kishkovsky, secretary for ecumenical affairs of the Orthodox Church in America and president-elect of the National Council of Churches; Archbishop-Metropolitan Stephen Sulyk of the Ukrainian Catholic Church in the United States; Micah Naftalin, national director of the Union of Councils for Soviet Jews; and George Weigel, president of the James Madison Foundation. Also present was Amy Sherman, the person who managed the appeal project for the foundation.

The president assured the group that he would make religious rights part of Kuchmiak consecrated bishop

Newly ordained Bishop Michael Kuchmiak is embraced by Archbishop Pio Laghi, the Vatican's representative in the United States.

PHILADELPHIA — The Rev. Michael Kuchmiak, 65, was ordained bishop during a pontifical divine liturgy celebrated here at Immaculate Conception Ukrainian Catholic Cathedral on Wednesday, April 27.

The principal consecrator during the ceremony was Archbishop Stephen Sulyk, metropolitan for Ukrainian Catholics in the United States. Bishop Kuchmiak will serve as auxiliary bishop to Metropolitan Sulyk, in addition to being titular bishop of Agathopolis. He was nominated a bishop in March by Pope John Paul II.

Assisting at the consecration were Archbishop Maxim Hermaniuk, metropolitan for Ukrainian Catholics in Canada, and Bishop Innocent Lotocky of the St. Nicholas Eparchy in Chicago.

Bishop Robert Moskal of St. Joseph Eparchy in Parma, Ohio, delivered the homily in both the Ukrainian and English languages. Bishop Moskal was Bishop Kuchmiak's predecessor as auxiliary bishop of Philadelphia.

Pope John Paul II was represented at the consecration by Archbishop Pio Laghi, papal pro-nuncio to the United States. Retired Cardinal John Krol of Philadelphia also was present.

Some 30 bishops of both the Eastern and Latin rite Catholic Church participated in the day's events. Ukrainian Catholic bishops present included: Basil Losten of Stamford, Conn.; Michael Hrynchyn of France, Demetrius Greschuk of Edmonton, Basil Filevich of Saskatoon and Jerome Chimy of New Westminster, B.C.

Among other hierarchs present were: Archbishop Stephen Kocisko and Auxiliary Bishop John Bilock, both the Lawyers question judges' verdict in Demjanjuk war crimes trial

by Roma Hadzewycz

JERSEY CITY, N.J. — North American lawyers well-acquainted with the case of John Demjanjuk have expressed shock and puzzlement at the verdict announced by the judges at this, the second Nazi war crimes trial held in Israel.

Chicago attorney S. Paul Zumbakis told The Ukrainian Weekly in a telephone interview, "I am puzzled by the judges' certitude that he (Mr. Demjanjuk) is 'Ivan the Terrible.' Apparently there was a tremendous amount of contradictory evidence — and yet the judges came out and said they had no doubt about the identity of the defendant."

Attorney Walter Anastas of Minneapolis told The Weekly, "I was shocked at the verdict. The death sentence was unpleasant, but not a big surprise; the verdict was the big surprise."

Mr. Anastas said he was surprised because he had become convinced through his reading and research, as well as a visit to the trial as an official observer for the Ukrainian American Bar Association and the Ukrainian Canadian Advocates' Society, that "there was a very significant doubt about John Demjanjuk's guilt."

George Danyliw, a Toronto lawyer who heads the Ukrainian Canadian Advocates' Society, said, "I did not expect a guilty verdict. The evidence did not warrant a guilty verdict."

He added, "No other criminal court in a Western democracy would have rendered a guilty verdict based on the evidence used by the prosecution."

And Maplewood, N.J., attorney Nestor Olesnycky, who is also a Church worldwide, strongly urged the president to meet with underground Ukrainian Church leaders "as a public manifestation of U.S. support for the resurrection of banned Ukrainian Churches." The cardinal, who is based in Rome, was accompanied on his two-day trip to Washington by Bishop Robert Moskal of the Ukrainian Catholic Diocese of St. Josaphat in Parma.

"What greater gift can be bestowed upon 50 million Ukrainians in this Millennium anniversary than their God-given right to worship in their own Church?" Cardinal Lubachivsky declared. A presidential visit to the Danilov monastery, on the other hand, "would lend credence to the atheistic Kremlin's usurping of the 1,000-year-old Ukrainian Christian legacy — a legacy for which, I, my brother in Christ, Metropolitan Mstyslav of the Ukrainian Orthodox Church, our predecessors and our people have risked their lives and freedom to honor, protect and live out in the underground church."

Archbishop Mstyslav Skrypnyk, Metropolitan of the Ukrainian Orthodox Church of the U.S.A. and Diaspora, who was present at the White House but whose remarks were delivered by the Very Rev. Frank Estocin, urged legalization of the Ukrainian Orthodox Church in Ukraine, as well as "complete and unrestricted use of the native Ukrainian language in all worship services, in preaching the Gospel, in religious instruction and in all Ukrainian educational institutions."

He also implored President Reagan to intercede with Soviet General Secretary Mikhail Gorbachev for permission to send to Ukraine religious, cultural and educational material from the United States.

President Reagan's talk at the seminar, planned to precede the summit and give the president a chance to meet with groups with a direct interest in his trip, was reported widely by the national and international press corps. Twice President Reagan mentioned the "Millennium of Christianity in Kiev Rus'." He blasted the Soviet regime's religious rights record saying, "the Ukrainian Catholic Church — the Uniate Church — is still closed, outlawed and persecuted."

He urged that the occasion of the Millennium be marked by "freedom for the faithful in Russia, Ukraine, the Baltic States and all regions of the Soviet Union."

Peter Reddaway of the Kennan Institute opened the seminar with a summary of the situation in the Soviet Union today. The Rev. Oleksa Harbuziuk, president of the All-Ukrainian Evangelical Baptist Fellowship, based in Berwyn, Ill., also attended, as did Father Victor Potapov of the Russian Orthodox Cathedral of St. John the Baptist, Washington. The Rev. Potapov termed some of the changes concerning religion in the Soviet Union "for the benefit of the West, to pull the wool over our eyes."

Also giving presentations were Pastor Stefan Matveyuk; Bishop Paul Baltakis of the Lithuanian Catholic Church; Kent Hill of the Institute on Religion and Democracy, an advocate for Evangelical Protestant denominations; Morris Abram, a spokesman for Soviet Jewry; Aishe Seitmuratova, representing believers in Islam, and a Hare Krishna devotee.

At the head table of Reagan administration officials at the seminar was Paula Dobriansky, deputy assistant secretary of state for human rights and humanitarian affairs.

Despite the gloomy appraisal of the status of religious believers in the Soviet Union, President Reagan found reason for hope. He claimed that the Soviets have imprisoned no one on the grounds of "unauthorized practice of religion" for the last two years. The source of this information is not known.

Although "the history of the 20th century has too often been brutal and tragic," President Reagan said, there have been repeated instances of "transcendence, devotion and sanctity. Even conversion."

President Reagan spoke of the human need and "hunger that no man-made institution in any society can ever fulfill. He cited the case of former dissident psychiatrist Anatoly Koryagin who, immediately after emigration to the West, sought baptism.

Among the recently freed dissidents the President greeted at the seminar were Mykola Rudenko, head of the External Representation of the Ukrainian Helsinki Group, and Iosif Begun, a Jewish activist imprisoned for teaching Hebrew.

In his remarks, Mr. Begun echoed Lubachivsky's comments. "Don't be misled by official statements" advertising an end of sanctions and freedom for all religions. Mr. Rudenko, who was persecuted on political grounds, spoke of the courage exhibited by Christians imprisoned with him. Had he not seen this iron faith himself, he would not have believed it was possible, he said. And the oppression continues.

Mr. Rudenko described the destruction of a wooden shrine/church in the spring of 1985 in Ukraine. Soldiers trampled on the iconostas, kicked icons and trucked away religious treasures, he told the White House audience in Ukrainian, as Katya Chumachenko, special assistant to Assistant Secretary of State Richard Schifter, translated.

This shrine had survived the Austro-Hungarian empire, World War I, Polish rule, Nazi occupation, "but it didn't survive 'perestroika,'" Mr. Rudenko said. In his position as the first chairman head of the Ukrainian Helsinki Group, Mr. Rudenko continuously received reports of harassment of Ukrainian Catholics, including beatings and arrests. And yet more than 500 believers recently petitioned Mikhail Gorbachev to legalize the Ukrainian Catholic Church.

In his various meetings with lawmakers and officials in Washington on May 3-4, Cardinal Lubachivsky was often asked to identify what makes the Ukrainian Catholic Church so menacing to the Kremlin. "It is...a threat to both the Moscow Patriarchate and the Soviet government," he said. "The former is afraid to lose its power and possessions, the latter its monopoly over human souls." And the intimidation felt by Moscow is not so much that the church is Catholic, but that it is Ukrainian.

"Continue needling" the Soviets, Cardinal Lubachivsky beseeched members of Congress. "Insist and keep the pressure on," he said, adding that the Soviets "are very afraid of bad public opinion."

He described a new, vicious and insidious form of "moral chicanery" (that) leaves no bloodstains, creates no martyrs, but is no less effective than before. The families of believers are harassed; children who believe are ridiculed in school and in some cases, believers are forced to sign incriminating documents or face imprisonment. In other cases, Russian Orthodox priests are asked to report attendance at their parishes, and believers who don't go and who are suspected of being Ukrainian Catholic are thereby exposed to harassment.

Repeal Soviet gestures, such as allowing the printing of 100,000 Ukrainian-language Bibles and up to 400,000 Russian-language ones are "window-dressing" for Western consumption, Cardinal Lubachivsky said.

Cardinal Lubachivsky's schedule in Washington included a news conference and breakfast with members of the House of Representatives. At the May 4 breakfast, hosted by Rep. William Lipinski (D-Ill.) and attended by Reps. William Broomfield (R-Mich.), Jack Davis (R-Ill.), Richard Durbin (R-Ill.), Benjamin Gilman (R-N.Y.), James Sensenbrenner (R-Wis.), Bill Green (R-N.Y.) and Connie Morella (R-Md.), Cardinal Lubachivsky was asked to describe the current condition of the Ukrainian Catholic Church in Ukraine.

It is far from ideal, the cardinal said, but the people persevere in their faith. The oppression endured for more than 40 years in exhausting both the lay and clergy, he said.

Rep. Lipinski, prime House sponsor of the Millennium bill, said he does not believe "the general American populace understands the situation in Eastern Europe. So we have a greater obligation [to educate them]. We in the U.S. have a great opportunity because of our free society."

During the May 3 press conference

the summit agenda.

In hand-delivered letters dated April 5 and April 18, the foundation also requested a meeting with Soviet Ambassador Yuri Dubinin. Mr. Dubinin, however, has not replied to the letters, which asked for an opportunity to present the appeal to him for transmission to General Secretary Gorbachev.

On April 25, 10 copies of the appeal with a cover letter signed by Metropolitan Sulyk, the Rev. Kishkovsky, and Messrs. Naftalin and Weigel were delivered to the Soviet Embassy.

In a statement to a news conference on April 27, Mr. Weigel told the press:

"The appeal asks that the Soviet Union bring its constitutional and statutory law, and its administrative practice, into line with the commitments to religious freedom which the USSR has made in a host of international legal agreements."

"We are asking nothing of the Soviet Union that the Soviet government has not already committed itself to do," he added.

The appeal asks that:

- religious associations be restored the status of "juridical person" under Soviet law;

- houses of worship, religious artifacts and religious books which have been expropriated by Soviet authorities be returned to the appropriate religious bodies;

- religious instruction of children, young people, and adults be permitted outside the home;

- religious organizations be permitted to engage in charitable activities;

attended by nearly 20 reporters from several major dailies, wire agencies and other press services, Cardinal Lubachivsky confirmed that the Vatican will send a delegation to the Millennium festivities in Moscow, for the sake of "ecumenism," but Pope John Paul will not go.

The cardinal's appearances brought to light several other facts:

- Of all Russian Orthodox churches in the Soviet Union, 80 percent are in Ukraine.

- Half of the 160 religious prisoners in the Soviet Union identified by Keston College are Ukrainian.

- Cardinal Lubachivsky has as yet had "no answer" to his overture made about two months ago to the Russian Orthodox people to come together in "mutual love" and to "forgive and forget."

- He revealed that possibly in 1989, Cardinal Joseph Glemp of Poland will allow for the appointment of a Ukrainian bishop in Poland to care for a flock of nearly 500,000 who say they are Ukrainian Catholics. Sources estimate that as many as 2 million Ukrainians live in Poland. The country already has 65 Ukrainian Catholic priests and 17 seminarians.

- believers who wish to emigrate from the Soviet Union on religious grounds be allowed to do so;

- a general amnesty be declared for all religious prisoners of conscience.

Mr. Weigel stated at the press conference:

"We are all aware of the remarkable conjunction of the Millennium of Christianity in Kievan Rus', the Moscow summit and the present turnings in the Soviet Union that have been made more publicly visible because of Mr. Gorbachev's campaign for glasnost and perestroika. I believe that there is no truer test of the boundaries of glasnost and perestroika than this matter of religious liberty."

"There is increasing evidence of a vibrant religious life in the USSR, after 70 years of systematic discrimination against religious believers. The appeal establishes, we hope, a bond of solidarity between prominent Americans and tens of millions of religious believers in the Soviet Union. Out of that bond of solidarity can come, I believe, progress toward peace with freedom," Mr. Weigel concluded.

Also speaking at the April 27 press conference were: the Rev. Kishkovsky; Edward Leavy, D.C./Maryland regional director of the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith; and Dr. Bohdan R. Bociurkiw, professor of political science at Carleton University in Ottawa, who is a scholar of Soviet religious policy and practice.

Among the signatories of the appeal were Metropolitan Sulyk, Pastor Oleksa Harbuziuk of the All-Ukrainian Evangelical Baptist Fellowship and Myron Wasyluk of the Ukrainian National Information Service.

Reagan to call for religious freedom

By Maria Rudensky

WASHINGTON — Responding to a personal appeal from Myroslav Cardinal Lubachivsky, President Ronald Reagan promised on May 3 to demand religious liberty for Ukrainian Catholic and Ukrainian Orthodox believers when he is in the Soviet Union for the summit May 29 to June 2.

Cardinal Lubachivsky met privately with the president in the Oval Office of the White House after a seminar on religious rights in the Soviet Union in the White House East Room.

But the president rejected Cardinal Lubachivsky's request, echoed by two Russian Orthodox churchmen, to refrain from visiting Moscow's Danilov Monastery during the summit.

He told Cardinal Lubachivsky he has agreed to go and cannot change the arrangement, and he will make a stand on behalf of religious freedom.

The monastery, a set of 700-year-old buildings rebuilt at Soviet government expense, "only five years ago housed a prison for children," said Father Vladimir Shibaeff, identified as a priest of the Russian Orthodox Church abroad, who spoke at the White House seminar. The monastery was also described as "a Potemkin village shown to every foreign dignitary."

The president's decision was viewed with dismay by some in the Ukrainian-American community, especially in light of his May 2 signing of the congressional resolution discouraging official participation in Kremlin-

Ronald Reagan sponsored millennial events as long as Ukrainian churches remain banned.

La Salle offers course on Ukrainian literature

By Erast Z. Pohorylo

PHILADELPHIA — As part of the celebration of the millennium of Ukrainian Christianity, a course in Ukrainian literature was offered at La Salle University during the spring semester.

The three-credit course, taught by Dr. Leonid Rudnytsky, was discussed in detail, and it was showed how this earliest known Ukrainian epic contains the basic principles of Christian ethics and morality.

Several of the works of Taras Shevchenko and Ivan Franko were considered with special attention to their religious content. Christian themes and motifs in Soviet Ukrainian

The Millennium Forum began with a lecture by Dr. Miroslav Labunka, also of La Salle University, on the subject of the baptis, of Kievan Rus by Volodymyr the Great in 988. Dr. Labunka reviewed the historical facts and indicated some of the wealth and power of Kievan Rus, later to be called Ukraine.

He emphasized the significance including more than a dozen Ukrainians, Cardinal Lubachivsky strongly urged the president to meet with underground Ukrainian church leaders "as a public manifestation of U.S. support for the resurrection of our banned Ukrainian churches."

Cardinal Lubachivsky was accompanied on his three-day trip to Washington by Bishop Robert Moskal of the Ukrainian Catholic Church of St. Josaphat in Parma, Ohio.

"What greater gift can be bestowed upon 50 million Ukrainians in this millennial anniversary than their God-given right to worship in their own church?" Cardinal Lubachivsky declared. A presidential visit to the Danilov monastery, on the other hand, "would lend credence to the atheistic Kremlin's usurping of the 1,000-year-old Ukrainian Christian legacy — a legacy which I, my Brother in Christ, Metropolitan Mstyslav of the Ukrainian Orthodox Church — our predecessors and our people have risked their lives and freedom to honor, protect and live out in the underground church."

Mstyslav Skrypnyk, Archbishop of Philadelphia, Metropolitan of the Ukrainian Orthodox Church of the United States and Diaspora, who was present at the White House but whose remarks were delivered by Pastor Frank Estocin, urged legalization of the Ukrainian Orthodox Church in Ukraine, as well as "complete and unrestricted use of the native Ukrainian language in all worship services, in preaching the Gospel, in religious instruction and in all Ukrainian educational institutions."

He also implored Reagan to intercede with Soviet General

Secretary Mikhail Gorbachev for permission to send to Ukraine religious, cultural and educational materials from the United States.

Reagan's talk at the seminar, planned to precede the summit and give the president a chance to meet with groups with a direct interest in his trip, was reported widely by the national and international press corps.

Twice Reagan mentioned the millennium of Christianity in Kiev Rus. He blasted the Soviet regime's religious rights record, saying, "the Ukrainian Catholic Church — the Uniate Church — is still closed, outlawed and persecuted."

Peter Reddaway of the Kennan Institute opened the seminar with a summary of the situation in the Soviet Union today. Rev. Oleksa Harbuziuk, president of the all-Ukrainian Evangelical Baptist Fellowship, also attended, as did Fr. Victor Potapov, of the Russian Orthodox Cathedral of St. John the Baptist in Washington. Fr. Potapov termed some of the changes concerning religion in the Soviet Union "for the benefit of the West, to pull the wool over our eyes."

Also giving presentations were Pastor Stefan Matveyuk, Bishop Paul Baltakis of the Lithuanian Catholic Church; Kent Hill of the Institute on Religion and Democracy, an advocate for Evangelical Protestant denominations; Morris Abrams, a spokesman for Soviet Jewry; Ayshe Seitmuratova, representing believers in Islam; and a Hare Krishna devotee.

Among the recently freed dissidents Reagan greeted at the seminar were Mykola Rudenko, head of the Ukrainian Helsinki Monitoring Group; and Iosif Begun, a Jewish activist imprisoned for teaching Hebrew.

believe that the evidence against Mr. Demjanjuk was weak. And according to historian Nikolai Tolstoy, in an article in a British paper (reprinted in America), many Israelis were embarrassed by the judges' behavior.

One recent article even suggested that, because of the doubt, the Israeli court would not be likely to invoke the death penalty if it found the accused guilty.

It began to look as though the Israelis would get themselves out of the trap this way. Mr. Demjanjuk would be found guilty, despite the lack of sufficient evidence to prove it — lest the Nazi-hunting game go down the drain. But the sentence would be one that would not weigh too heavily on Jewish consciences.

Thus, following the announcement of the death sentence, there was a startled — and dismayed — sounding editorial in the New York Times deploring the sentence.

There was, of course, no suggestion that the Israeli court had "erred" in finding Demjanjuk guilty. Instead, the editorial argued that by "sparing his life, to ensure the success of the policy."

To make Bill C-93 an effective piece of legislation, Dr. Petryshyn provided three priority recommendations:

1. Essentially, the proposed legislation is adopting the existing federal policy in the area of multiculturalism and giving it a legal basis. In this regard, the Ukrainian community in Canada has already publicly criticized the federal approach of "multiculturalism" within a bilingual framework.

Consequently, a more preferable description of the Canadian reality, and therefore the one that should be enshrined in legislation, is a policy of "bilingualism in a multicultural framework."

Multiculturalism is more than a "basic element" of the Canadian heritage, it is the Canadian heritage and identity and should
