BRADY, JAMES S.: Files, 1981-1989

Press Secretary

Biography

James Scott Brady was born on August 29, 1940 in Centralia, Illinois. In high school he excelled in several sports, and became an Eagle Scout. While attending the University of Illinois, he hosted a children's show at a local television station, and worked as a field representative for Senator Everett Dirksen (R-Illinois). He graduated in 1962 with a degree in political science. After a summer internship at the Department of Justice, he found work in Illinois state government and the private sector.

Brady married Sue Beh in 1961, but they divorced two years later. In 1973 he married Sarah Kemp, who was then the finance liaison for the Republican Party in Illinois. They moved to Washington, DC. Over the next seven years, Brady held various federal government positions: Special Assistant to the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development; Special Assistant to the Director of OMB; Assistant to the Secretary of Defense; and staff member under Senator William Roth. Brady was press secretary to John Connolly as Connolly sought the 1980 Republican presidential nomination. He went on to serve as Director of Public Affairs and Research for the 1980 Reagan-Bush campaign, and spokesman for the Office of the President-Elect in 1980-81. Brady became White House Press Secretary after Reagan was sworn into office in January 1981.

On March 30, Brady was shot in the forehead during the assassination attempt on President Reagan. Brady underwent over six hours of emergency surgery to remove bullet fragments from his head. He was hospitalized for most of the next eight months, undergoing additional surgeries, and nearly dying several times from blood clots. Brady finally left the hospital's care in November 1981. He was left partially paralyzed, with permanently slurred speech.

Brady formally returned to work in November 1982. Although he remained the White House Press Secretary until President Reagan left office, his injuries prevented him from resuming most of his duties. His assistant Larry Speakes continued to handle most press secretary functions, including hosting the regular White House press briefings, serving as the chief public spokesman for President Reagan and his Administration, and overseeing the Office of the Press Secretary. Marlin Fitzwater replaced Speakes in this role in 1987.

The Bradys took up the cause of gun control in 1985, after their young son picked up a loaded handgun in the car of an acquaintance. Sarah Brady became chair of Handgun Control Inc. in 1989, and the Center to Prevent Gun Violence in 1991. The two organizations were later renamed the Brady Campaign to Prevent Gun Violence and the Brady Center to Prevent Gun Violence, respectively. A 1993 law that tightened the process of purchasing a handgun from a federally licensed dealer was named the Brady Bill in Mr. Brady's honor. Brady also became involved in fundraising for a number of groups that work on behalf of the disabled. He served as vice chairman of the National Organization on Disability.

James and Sarah Brady made a televised prime-time appearance at 1996 Democratic National Convention, speaking behalf of gun control. They moved to Rehoboth Beach, Delaware in 1999. Mr. Brady made a rare return visit to Washington, DC in June 2004, to attend the funeral service for Ronald Reagan.

Brady moved into an Alexandria, Virginia retirement community in 2013. He died there on August 4, 2014. Following an autopsy, the Virginia medical examiner's office ruled his death a homicide, a result of the March 1981 gunshot wound.

This material is organized according to the preliminary container list developed by the Library staff in 1991.

There is additional James Brady material in the 1980 Campaign files and in the 1980-1981 Transition files. Please see an archivist regarding the availability of this material.
