DAWSON, THOMAS C. II: Files, 1985-1987

Office of the Chief of Staff: Deputy Assistant to the President and Executive Assistant to the Chief of Staff

Thomas Dawson was born in Washington, DC in 1948, the son of a Department of State Foreign Service officer. He grew up mostly in the Washington area. He attended Washington and Lee University in Virginia for a year (1966-67), earned a Bachelor's degree in Economics from Stanford University in 1970, and spent a year doing graduate work at Princeton University. He left Princeton to work in the Department of State in economic affairs positions that included postings in Rio de Janeiro and London. In 1976 Dawson enrolled in graduate school at Stanford University, from which he earned an M.B.A. degree two years later. He was then hired by the Washington-based management consulting firm McKinsey & Company. Dawson was active in the 1980 Reagan-Bush campaign, working with the planning task force on examination of government organization. After Reagan won the election, Dawson became executive assistant to Transition Personnel Director E. Pendleton James. He continued to work under Mr. James in the White House Office of Presidential Personnel after Reagan assumed the Presidency in January 1981; however, in February, Dawson left Presidential Personnel for the Treasury Department, where he served as Deputy Assistant Secretary for Developing Nations (1981-84) and Assistant Secretary for Business and Consumer Affairs (1984-85). When Treasury Secretary Donald Regan became White House Chief of Staff in February 1985, he brought Dawson back to the White House as his assistant. Dawson left the White House Office again in March 1987, shortly after Regan resigned as Chief of Staff, and became Executive Vice President at Regdon Associates. Dawson briefly returned to the Treasury Department in early 1989. He subsequently held positions with the International Monetary Fund and the investment firm Merrill Lynch.

This collection is arranged in three series. Given the nature of Dawson's job, a large percentage of the material in the first two series pertains to Donald Regan and his work. At this time, the Reagan Library has not located any Dawson files from his time in Presidential Personnel.
